et month forecast as heavens open to greet Labour's reign

BY ALAN HAMILTON AND DAMIAN WHITWORTH

THE MET OFFICE yesterday predicted 30 days of rain after the driest two-year period on record, and only three days before Michael Meacher, the new Environment Secretary, meets water companies for a drought crisis summit.

Although not quite a deluge of Old Testament proportions, the Labour governments are the true masters of weather. In 1976, after an exceptionally dry summer, the heavens opened within hours of Harold Wilson appointing Denis Howell Minister for Drought

Forecasters predict wet condi-tions through to the end of May and beginning of June, particularly in southeast England, which has suffered most from lack of rain. Thirty-day forecasts remain unreliable, but the weather chart for the coming week looks very unsettled, with the potential for heavy rain across the whole country. Thundery showers could strike anywhere over the next two or three days; after that, further rain is likely to be concentrated in southern Britain. As a harbinger of the downpours to come, half an inch of rain fell in an hour in East Anglia yesterday morning.

Water companies yesterday welcomed the forecast, saying that it would deter gardeners from using hoses and sprinklers and therefore help conserve the present low

However, they said that even 30 days' worth would do little to recharge underground aquifers and boreholes to the levels of two years ago, as so much summer rain merely evaporates or is taken up by

The past 25 months have been the driest such period in Britain for more than 200 years, and not since 1929 have the first four months of any year been as dry as 1997.

The year's first sprinkler bans have already been introduced in Guernsey and around Sutton in Surrey, in contrast to the north and west of England and Wales, where reservoir levels are much as they should be for the time of year.

The spectre of drought hangs over this year's Chelsea Flower Show, whose exhibitors were planning their displays long before the weathermen predicted an end to the projonged dry spell. More than 20 exhibitors at the show, which opens next week, have adopted the theme of water conservation. Some will show how British gardens may have to be transformed to meet changes. Among the teams of experts advising visitors on how to save their gardens will be a South possible long-term climatic

African Zulu healer who is an expert on drought-tolerant plants. What the water companies need urgently, however, is a healer of eaks. When he meets them on Monday, Mr Meacher is expected to insist they do more to plug mains fractures, which lose an estimated billion gallons of water a day.

Sinn Fein offered exploratory talks

Blair takes gamble for Ulster peace

By Nicholas Watt, Chief Ireland Correspondent

TONY BLAIR took à gamble. for peace in Northern Ireland yesterday when he offered Sinn Fein the chance of meetore an IRA ceasefire.

In a speech which he had been preparing since well before the election, the Prime Minister told an audience in Belfast that his radical plan was "one further effort" to bring Sinn Fein into the full political process,

Hopes rose last night that Mr Blair may have kick-started the faltering peace talks when Sinn Fein announced that it would contact the Northern Ireland Office to make arrangements for the Unionists also responded positively after Mr Blair offset his offer to Sinn Fein by saying that he thought it unlikely that there would be a united Ire-and in his lifetime. most train is leaving. I want you on that train. But it is leaving anyway, and I will not allow it to wait for you. You cannot hold the process to ransom any longer. So end the violence and end it now."

However, the Prime Minister said he would help the process by inviting Sinn Fein to their first talks with government officials in 15 months. the separate multi-party talks when they resume at Stormont

Mr Blair warned Sinn Fein that there would be no negotiations over the terms of an IRA ceaselire at the meeting and that Sinn Fein would be challenged to prove that re publicans want peace.

"If they are, I will not be slow in my response," he said. "If they are not, they can expect no sympathy or understanding. I will be implacable in pursuit of terrorism."

The Prime Minister's remarks made clear that if the IRA declared a genuine ceasefire he was likely to waste little time in inviting Sinn Fein to the multi-party talks. His response would contrast with John Major, who faced a barrage of criticism from nationalists when he waited three months after the 1994 IRA ceasefire before allowing Sinn Fein to join "exploratory talks" with officials.

It also emerged last night that Mr Blair ensured that his speech received a favourable reception by giving a wide spectrum of political leaders advance notice of his plans. The Prime Minister telephoned John Major on Thursday in the control of day night to go through his speech, while Dr Mowlam had a chat with Sir Patrick

Mayhew, her predecessor.

She also spoke to David Trimble, the Ulster Unionist leader, and to John Hume, the SDLP leader. However, she was unable to contact the Reverend lan Paisley, the leader of the Democratic Unionist Party, who was the only senior political figure to react unfavourably to Mr

A RECORD 148 countries will be watching the FA Cup final live on television today in a match which is the biggest domestic money-spinning

Mobutu forced out of

FROM DAVID ORR IN KINSHASA

PRESIDENT Mobutu of Zaire yesterday lost his grip on power after 32 years of autocratic rule. His corrupt regime was on the point of collapse last night after his hasty departure from the besieged capital of Kinshasa

The President reigns but he doesn't govern," Kin-Kiey Mulumba, the Zairean Information Minister, told a press conference in the capital. "The President has ceased to play any role in state affairs. It is now up to the Government to conduct the nation's affairs.' President Mobutu, who has flown to his jungle retreat in northern Zaire, has been given until Monday to resign. The ultimatum was issued by Laurent Kabila, the rebel leader whose forces are poised to seize Kinshasa.

Speculation mounted in the capital that President Mobutu has gone for good. Sources indicated that from his ancestral village of Ghadolite he will fly to Morocco.

Straw orders urgent inquiry into the alcopops industry

THE Home Secretary ordered an urgent investigation yesterday into the sale and marketing of alcopop drinks.

Jack Straw also told the drinks industry that unless it acted quickly he would introduce measures to control the advertising, marketing and even the content of the drinks, which are popular with young people. He said the Government was deeply concerned about the issues surrounding the sale of the drinks.

The move comes a day after producers of alcopop were condemned as grossly irresponsible by a judge after he heard that a 1+year-old boy became drunk on alcoholic lemonade and cider, and then burnt down a school. It also follows the publication of a survey yesterday claiming that more than half of teenagers consume alcopop drinks — which have an average alcohol content of 5 per cent. This is about the same alcoholic strength as most continental lagers but stronger than most English beers. The alcoholic content in wine is about 11 to 12 per cent. Mr Straw is particularly concerned that the drinks are often marketed to appeal to those under 18, sometimes with the use of cartoon characters and drug-related images. 'Alcopops abuse is a real concern," he said. "We all know the links between alcohol abuse and crime. Everything must be done to stop young people falling into a downward spiral of offending."

The Portman Group, which s funded by the drinks industry, has drawn up a code of practice to stop abuses in advertising and marketing.

Stephen Thoms, 39, had three times raised the cost of installing the conservatory at Stanley, Co Durham. At Durham Crown Court, other dissastisfied customers watched as he was jailed for three months for demanding money with menaces. He also faces a contempt of court action for mouthing abuse at the customers in court.

It also emerged that Thoms had allegedly threatened law-yers handling a civil claim brought by the Rutherfords. In a letter to them, he suggested: "You are playing a very for more money.

The couple said they would not pay until the job was completed to their satisfaction. He wrote to them saying: "My advice is to pay for the extra and do not treat me as a soft touch. As others have found out to their cost, I'm not blowing off steam, I'm deadly

Forget the dresses - even the brochure will cost you £1,250

A BROCHURE signed by Diana, Princess of Wales, for an auction of her dresses goes on sale today for

The purple leather-bound vol-ume, believed to be the most expensive catalogue ever produced by an auction house, contains colour pictures of the 80 outfits to be sold by Christie's in New York on June 25. The Princess has posed in six outfits for photographs by Lord Snowdon but most of the pictures were taken previously by press photographers. A spokeswoman for Christie's said that there were 250 limited editions of the catalogue available, of which 91 have been reserved.

For those of more modest means, a canvas-bound catalogue is available at £160 and a paperback edition costs £35. Christie's has received almost £350,000 from pre-bookings for all three catalogue The auction, which is expected to raise £4 million, was the idea of Prince William, who suggested selling the dresses to make money for charity and create some space in his mother's overcrowded wardrobes. The proceeds will go to two of the Princess's favourite charities: the Royal Marsden Hospital Cancer Fund and the Aids Crisis Trust. Most of the dresses were created by British designers between 1981 and 1996. Among the designers are Victor Edelstein, Norman Hartnell, Zandra Rhodes, Bruce Oldfield, and David and Elizabeth Emmanuel. The Princess's wedding dress the Emmanuels' most famous commission — is not included in the

Many of the outfits are by Cather-ine Walker, who made a long dress of lilac silk with beaded bodice which the Princess first wore at a gala celebrating 40 years of the Queen's reign. The dress, which cost the Princess £2,200, is expected to fetch at least £150,000. Another Walker on sale is a white embroidered crepe evening dress with a high-collared bolero jacket which the Princess first wore to the British Fashion Awards in 1989, it cost £3,500 and is expected to fetch £250,000.

There is no formal reserve price on any of the dresses, which range from size 8 to 12.

THE widow of a cyclist ran sobbing from court yesterday after a judge ordered a jury to clear a bus driver who had crushed her husband beneath the wheels of his vehicle. The jury was told that because of conflicting evidence it would not be safe to convict the driver of causing death by dangerous driving. Later Jane Waldron, a mother of two, was too distraught to speak. Russell Waldron, 35, died after being involved in an alleged road rage incident with Walton Christie, the bus driver, during an evening rush hour last May. Witnesses had told Knights bridge Crown Court said that Mr Christie, 54, from Enfield, north London, had sworn at Mr Waldron for overtaking him on the outside and that he had driven as close as he could to intimidate him before colliding with the rear wheel of the bicycle. Seconds later, the court was told, Mr Waldron, from Forest Hill, southeast London, had disappeared under the wheels of the bus. Mr Christie had called for an ambulance but Mr Waldron had died instantly. Mr Christie, who denied causing death by dangerous driving, said he had braked as soon as Mr Waldron overtook him and insisted that the cyclist had been alongside his bus when he fell beneath it.

Judge Richard Walker said some witnesses had spoken of Mr Waldron moving into the path of the bus as it drove along Waterloo Bridge. Others, he said, had not,

Golf promoter held in Dubai without charge

THE Foreign Office has been asked to intervene over a British businessman being held in prison in Dubai, with no reasons given nor charges laid. George Afkinson, 45, who organised and promoted the Professional Golfers' Association European Tour tour-nament, the Desert Classic, has been held for II weeks.

on March I while visiting the Desert Classic as a tourist and, despite pressure from the British Embassy in Dubaihas not been told how long he will be held, or on what charge in Dubai it is legal to hold someone indefinitely. The authorities say they are continuing investigations.

His lawyers in London. Dawson & Co. believe the reason for his arrest is a dispute - now the centre of a £4 million breach-of-contract claim by Mr Alkinson at the High Court in London — over the promotion rights to the Desert Classic.

Mr Aikinson's wife Helene, 49. and her two teenage daughters are distraught. She said: "We are devastated. I find the whole feing absolute-ly amazing. George is a strong-man, a fighter, a very respect-ed man, but when I spoke to him the other day he did not

The dispute over the Desert Classic arose in 1992 when the Dubai Government songht to take over the promotion rights, then held by Mr Afkin-son's company. Karl Litten. ### Mr Racing reaches end of his course

By RICHARD EVANS RACING CORRESPONDENT

AFTER being accused of rude-ness and arrogance, John Jenyns acted like a gentleman yesterday and resigned as a steward at York racecourse.

The swift decision came after his position as chairman of the panel of stewards was regarded as untenable because of the way he treated two television executives at the racecourse this week. Mr Jenyns ordered John Fairley. a former managing director of Yorkshire Television, and Andrew Franklin, producer of Channel 4 racing, to stand throughout a half-hour meeting and Mr Fairley was told to take his hand out of his pocket.

A statement from the race-course said: "Following the conclusion of the May race meeting. Mr John Jenyns of-fered his resignation as a member of the stewards panel at York and this has been accepted by the race committee. The committee wishes to thank Mr Jenyns for his valued services as a steward over the past 15 years."

Mr Jenyns, 52, known as York's Mr Racing, is also a steward at Pontefract and Redcar. Both racecourses were discussing his future last night. The Jockey Club, which is ultimately responsible for the integrity of the sport, will be hoping he stands down from both courses. "If he does not jump, he will be pushed." one insider said yesterday.

It is rare for racing's conservative establishment to disown one of its members with such alacrity, but the way he treated the television executives was regarded as beyond the pale by the vast majority of racing's rulers.

The 52 prints, the largest series found in Britain, are believed to have been made by a family group of Diplodocus or Brachiosaurus as they grazed on tree tops. The biggest is 1.13 metres (44 in) wide.

They were uncovered by the leaseholder of a Dorset quarry as he excavated for Purbeck limestone. Kevin Keates had no idea what the indentations were until a scientist friend strolling through the quarry at Worth Maltravers spotted them and alerted experts.

The rest of the site is being excavated to see if more prints are there and it is likely to become a National Heritage site. Josephine Wright, a palaeontologist from Bristol University who is leading the excavation, said that the shape and size of the prints showed have made prints this shape."

Dr Wright said. "You've got big, deep, round ones which belong to the back legs, and semi-circular, smaller and shallower prints which were left by the dinosaurs' forefeet. It's very exciting, because although we suspected we had Sauropods here, we've never had any proof." Excavation has also revealed a long tail-

The enormous prints are likely to have been left by up to ten dinosaurs, possibly an extended family, as they roamed for food. These dinosaurs lived in the cretaceous period between 145 and 140 million years ago," Dr Wright

"From what we've seen so far, these Sauropods were about eight metres [26 feet] high and 15 metres [49 feet] long, and would have weighed about 30 tonnes. At that time, the landscape here was coastal. The dinosaurs would be walking along the shore of a coastal lagoon with a forest on one side, with huge fern trees, horsetails, and possibly some conifers. There was no grass Twenty million years later the area disappeared into the sea. Tides from the lagoon deposited sediment on the footprints and dried out and hardened, forming a protec-Mr Keates said: "When I saw these footprints appear, I thought they were just huge dents and thought 'That's another lot of stones spoilt, then"." He leases the quarry from the National Trust and is contracted to take stone away. These footprints could have ended up broken to pieces and would be sat in local rockeries by now," he said. "By coincidence, a naturalist friend of mine was walking through the quarry." Fencing has been erected around the site and further excavation is expected to last another week. Sandy Joakim of the National Trust said that the most important task was to preserve the prints from exposure to frost and dust. We want to conserve these prints for the future and work out some form of public ac-cess. We will be working with Dr Wright to make sure they are properly protected."

Mud stops early life in its tracks

By NIGEL HAWKES, SCIENCE EDITOR

HUGE numbers of dinosaur footprints have been found around the world in the past 20 years. There are more than 300 known sites in Colorado and Utah, some with multiple tracks that bear witness to the presence of thousands of the

The tracks were made in thin layers of soft mud around the edge of water where the. dinosaurs drank. After they left and the water level fell, the prints were baked hard before being covered by lake sediment again. This preserved: the footprints until they were exposed by faulting erosion or quarrying.

The footprints can be used to identify the dinosaurs and reveal details about their behaviour. At one site in Colorado, 12 parallel tracks left by Apatosaurs of almost identical size shows that they were social animals, walking in line and abreast, Footprints left by a Stego-sour on a rock 20 miles north of Broome in Western Austra-lia were the only evidence that this species had lived there-until thieves hacked the prints off with power tools and took them away. Like other fossils, footprints have a value.

Dinosaur tracks predate the discovery of the dinosaurs. Bird-like tracks were found in Massachusetts as early as 1802, and attributed to Noah's Raven or the Turkey

In an attempt to widen access to justice. Sir Richard Scott, head of the High Court's Chancery Division, also called on Lord Irvine of Lairg, the Lord Chancellor, to abolish the policy that courts finance es through fees charged to litigants.

He challenged the tradition that the loser pays the winner's costs and suggested that bodies that financed litigation, such as the Legal Aid Board, should not be immune from paying costs of filled extensions. paying costs of failed actions.

One obstacle preventing people from exercising their constitutional right to the courts was the cost of lawyers fees, Sir Richard said. But reforms to civil litigation proposed last year by Lord Woolf, Master of the Rolls, would not "realistically" do more than save money at the margins of

Instead, some basic propositions had to be rethough he told a conference in London of the County Court Advisers Group, a section of the Advice Services Alliance. He said no win, no fee litigation, under which lawyers charged nothing if they-lost but increased their normal fees by up to 100 per cent if they won, had arbitration proceedings.

He would like greater use of lingation insurance encouraged by tax incentives. "Just as health insurance schemes are sometimes offered as part of a remuneration package to enployees, I would like to see employers offering litigation.

cost insurance to employees as part of an employment package."

Sir Richard said that the policy of the winner having his costs paid by the loser was meant to discourage "black-mail" litigation. But in the United States there was no United States there was no such rule and some felt it would have a "positively un-constitutional" effect on access

There is a good deal to be said for a new approach to costs, under which the loser is not required to pay the winextent that, the prosecution of the case had been unreason-able. That would prevent blackmail litigation and would encourage sensible compromises, he added.

In a further proposal, he said that where inigation was financed by a body such as the Legal Aid Board and an action was unsuccessful, they should have to pay the costs of the winner. The same might apply to lawyers acting under condi-tional feet if they funded an msuccessful action.

Sir Richard called on the Lord Chancellor to ditch the policy by which courts are selffinancing and cover their costs, including the costs of the judges' salaries, through fees charged to litigants. The poli-ty was inconsistent with the principles that ought to onder

Dilemma for Kent nuclear power station where fish have gained seal of approval

NUCLEAR power station is planning to shut down its reactors, at a cost of millions of pounds, to save a seal called Nuisance trapped in a waterway used to cool its

The female grey seal is believed to have become trapped after being sucked down an intake pipe that runs a quarter of a mile out to sea. It has been in the reservoir for ten days and appears to be having a whale of a time because the tank is full of fish. According to Martin Weeks, the plant production manager of Dungeness B nuclear station on the Kent coast, there are probably more fish per cubic metre in the tank than anywhere in the North Sea. The seal heaven where Nuisance is gorging itself - supplies cooling wat-

Mr Weeks said yesterday: The reservoir is too dangerous for staff to enter but is all right for seals, who are de-

The seal contemplates the sheer sides of the reservoir at Dungeness B

One of the two reactors at the station is shut for several weeks every year for safety testing, allowing maintenance work to be carried out. Any stoppage now would mean that the annual shut-down would have to be shortened, Mr

"I may make a mana ment decision with the staff to carry out the maintenance work now rather than later, and this may limit the com-mercial loss." Mr Weeks be-lieves the seal entered the intake pipe through a grill damaged in a storm.

Detective deplores silence of road rage witnesses

BY STEWART TENDLER CRIME CORRESPONDENT

THE underworld is protecting the killer of the road rage victim Stephen Cameron out of misguided loyalty or fear, the detective leading the investigation said yesterday.

The anniversary of the murder falls on Monday. Detective Superintendent Nick Biddiss said that there were witnesses with key informa-tion about the stabbing of Mr Cameron, during an argument on an M25 interchange in Kent, who were refusing to help police. Others were "economic in their recollection of the truth" and some "told us

Mr Biddiss was speaking after the victim's parents, Ken and Toni Cameron, described in The Times yesterday their continued grief and dread of the anniversary. Mr Camer-on's girlfriend, Danielle Ca-ble, 18, in whose arms he died, now lives with them.

Mr Biddiss said that they had "gone through hell in the last year" and he appealed to potential witnesses to examine their consciences. There was "a wall of silence" over some aspects of the case.

There are people out there who could enable us to bring this investigation to a very early resolution," Mr Biddiss said. They were "not necessarily mainline criminals but people who, from fear, mis-guided loyalty or esoteric reasons of their own, will not talk

He said that they had information about the driver of the dark blue Land Rover Discovery used by the killer. Others knew about events on the day of the murder or what happened to the vehicle. Mr Biddiss suspected that it had been destroyed in a scrapyard. In the past year Kent police have traced more than 17,000 Discovery vehicles that meet the description. The only one outstanding is registered to Anthony Francis of Bexley. Kent, a name used by Kenneth Noye, the Brink's-Mar gold robber who vanished on the day of the murder. Mr Biddiss said that he would like to eliminate Mr Noye from his inquiries.

Young criminals force elderly nuns to close convent

By PAUL WILKINSON

A CONVENT has had to close after 70 years because of repeated break-ins and vandalism by local youths.

Last night a 14-year-old was on the run after absconding from a magistrates' court where he faced another charge of theft from The Daughters of Charity of St Vincent De Paul. He had smashed a window and stole a video recorder. The Roman Catholic community of two working nuns and two retired sisters in their eighties are moving out of their resi-dence in the tough Teesside district of Grangetown for a Sister Joseph, the Mother Superior, said: "I do admit that at first I felt like belting him when I saw what he had done to our home and window. But now I feel he needs help. We would love to help him if we could. Someone needs to spend time with him. sit down and offer help and keep an eye on him so he doesn't return to crime. He is at the crossroads of his life and the hope must be that he can become a reformed young man by the time he is 17."

Last month the boy ap-peared before Middlesbrough Youth Court where he admitted breaking into the convent and stealing a nun's handbag. He also confessed to other burglaries and was given a three-year supervision order. Two weeks later he returned to the convent and stole the video recorder after smashing through a double-glazed window with a slab of concrete.

Yesterday his mother and his social worker were present break-in and a burglary at an off-licence, but as magistrates retired to consider whether they needed further reports, the teenager fled. A warrant was issued for his arrest. Sister Joseph's first reaction to his absconding was: "We'd

They have been very supportive to us and part of me does feel we should stay living here to light the battle. But we have an average age of 70 and what can you do when you feel so at

FOR 40 years scaffolding has marred the appearance of Hereford Cathedral, one of the most beautiful in the country. But just as the scaf-fold was about to come down, for the first time in the living memory of half of Hereford's residents, they learnt that it is to stay up for a few more weeks to meet the needs of a film-maker.

The makers of The Shadow Run, a story of robbers and a choirboy, have asked that the scaffolding remain because it is integral to the plot. Geoffrey Reeve, the pro-ducer, is to pay the cathedral to retain the scaffolding until hooting has finished

The film stars Michael Caine and James Fox and will feature one of the eathedral's choristers. Matthew Pochin, 14. The choir will be on the soundtrack Lieutenant Colonel An-

The dean said: "The ma-sons are delighted that there is not a ball-flower in sight on the east end, where they are about to start work. This phase of the tower restora-tion is now finished. It has been a massive task. The scaffolding was due to be taken down and we had a ceremony where I put the last stone in place."

The dean added: 'The tower has been kept up by massive appeals launched every 70 years or so." During the latest restoration the cathedral ran out of money several times and was unable at one stage to match the grants provided by English Heritage. Since 1986 nearly E2 million has been spent on the tower, of which about two thirds came from English Heritage. The Hereford Ca-thedrai Perpetual Trust, set up in 1995, raised more than £300,000 to help to finish the

The dean said: "I certainly want the scaffolding down. It will be so refreshing to look at the tower from the old river bridge and see it with-out scaffolding for the first time in ages.

Credo Basic truth that 24,000 scholars

Throughout history, worship has often led to arrogance and judgmentalism. The voices of the faithful are often heard condemning the immoral ways of a sinful generation, rather than speaking of the glory of God

It seems that the more pious people hecome, the more they tend to look down at their fellows and to dismiss their godless and selfindulgent lifestyle. Those who would embrace such a disposition would do well to learn from the Jewish festival of Lag b'Omer, a day of joy and celebration for Jews the world over. In the second century, the Jews had just gone through the traumatic des-truction of their second Temple and a holocaust at the hands of the Romans. But a great sage arose like a comet in the blackened sky to give them bealing, hope and direction.

His name was Akiva. A poor shepherd who could not read or write, he was challenged by Rachel, the daughter of the richest man. of the time, for whom he laboured, to dedicate himself to study. In return, he would receive her hand in marriage. At 40 he took up her offer. They married, he left to study at the feet of the masters, and she was cut off from her family for running off with the impoverished

They saw each other only twice in 24 years, but at the end of that period he had returned with 24,000 disciples and was hailed as one of the greatest teachers since Moses. Then tragedy struck. An epidemic ran through the legions of Akiva's students and in only a few weeks nearly all died. The plague ended on Lag b'Omer with live of his finest students still alive, thus preserving the Jewish scholarly tradition, and Jews have commemorated the day ever since.

The Talmud declares that there was a reason for the epidemic in the eyes of God. brotherhood, love and unity always supersede religios and piety. Of Akiva's 24,000 disciples, each one was de-vout and scholarly, spending many hours daily immersed in Torah study and prayer. But they died respect for one another. Jeal-ousy and mean-spirited competition were rife.

Those who put more emphasis on prayer looked down at those selfish ones who would all condulge in scholarly pursuits. The scholars, in turn, looked down upon those engaged in prayer and o rant. Since they had no unity, they were rejected by the Creator.

Perhaps an even more compelling example may be brought from Saul, the first Jewish king. The rabbis teach that the Jews of his generation were so scrupulously observent and learned in Scripture that even three-yearold children could recite vast tracts by heart. And yet King Saul and his generation were defeated almost every time they went out to battle. God was not with them in their efforts against Jewish adversaries. Contrast this with Ahab, one of the wickedest kings in Jewish history. Not only was he married to the wicked queen Jezebel, who murdered, withthe exception of Elijah, all of God's true prophets, but Ahab also replaced national religious worship of the God of Israel with the pagan cult of Baal

And yet every time he went to battle he tasted victory. The Almighty accompanied his legions into combat because, as the rabbis proclaim. "his people went into battle as one man with one heart".
The idea that unity and brotherhood, in the eyes of the Deity, take precedence over worship should not appear revolutionary. God is our Father, and the greatest wish of every parent is that his children be closer to one another than to himself, because a parent loves his children more than he loves

The great Hasidic master, the Baal Shem Tov, taught that the portal by which man comes to love God is through love of his fellow man. Those people who give to be people who claim to love God but then loathe people must seriously question their belief in God as the Creator of all things and the Father of the human family.

Nations that lost their confidence and sense of identity became destabilised, he said, and drew on an ancient Chinese proverb: "If we continue down the path we appear to have chosen, the danger exists that we will end up exactly where we seem to be heading." Speaking at the Cannes Film Festival to launch his new book on the subject, The Undeclared War, Sir David pointed out that every aspect of film was invented in Europe. He reiterated proposals that he originally outlined in 1991 for a levy on video rentals and films electronically transmitted. Ten pence on every rental, he said, could be invested in training programmes while a second levy would be ploughed back into domestic productions. That sion of Pride and Prejudice,

Hollywood takes a swing at epic Old English poem

BY OUR ARTS CORRESPONDENT

HOLLYWOOD is adapting the oldest known poem in English literature for the big screen. Beawulf, whose origins are believed to date from the 8th century, will star Christopher Lambert, who made his name after appearing as Tarzan in Hugh Hudson's Greystoke.

The actor, whose previous eles have also included the mortal time traveller in the Highlander trilogy, said that as many as five American studios had made unsuccessthe most significant relic from the Augio-Saxon period and is the oldest poem in any modern language. It tells the story of Beowulf, a young warrior, and his tragic battle against Grendel and its equally grotesque mother. The poem survives in only one version, in a manuscript in the British

Ahern backs move to restart talks with Sinn Fein

BY AUDREY MAGES, IRELAND CORRESPONDENT

cuts and crime at the top of its election manifesto and is supporting moves to initiate contact between Sinn Fein and the London and Dublin governments.

Bertie Ahern, the party leader, said that he would re-open contacts between Sinn Fein and the Irish Government if he was elected Prime Minister on June 6 provided a restoration of the IRA ceasefire looked possible. He said that talks could be carried out by civil servants or a third party. He emphasised, however, that he would not talk to Sinn Fein as Prime Minister unless the IRA called a ceasefire. Mr Ahern's position is close to that spelt out by Tony Blair

However, Mr Ahern ruled out any role for Albert Reyn-olds, his former leader and Prime Minister, in the talks. Mr Reynolds was one of the architects of the Northern Ireland peace process. Mr Ahern said that he looked forward to working with Mr Blair, whom he described as "an open person, prepared to

Mr Ahern, 45, is portraying himself in the election campaign as the "young leader of a young country", promising to put people before politics. He came rantalisingly close to winning the title in 1994 when the Fianna Fail/Labour coali-

FIANNA FAIL has put tax tion led by Albert Reynolds collapsed. Fianna Fail expect-ed Dick Spring, the Labour leader, to return to the fold with Mr Ahern as Taoiseach. Instead, Mr Spring went into coalition with Fine Gael and the Democratic Left. Mr Ahern was devestated and has spent the intervening period modernising his image and uniting his party. Opinion polls place him as people's favourite for Taoiseach.

Fianna Fail wants to return to power in coalition with the Progressive Democrats, Coalitions have become something of a fixture of Irish political life. Mr Ahern said that the centre-right coalition - which is favourite to win the election — would overhaul the tax system and clamp down on crime.

If elected, his party intends to distribute the wealth generated by an expanding economy and cut the upper tax band of 48 per cent to 43 per cent. Mr Ahern said: "Relatively low-paid workers are having up to 55 per cent of their income deducted. No one at any level should have to give up more than half their additional earnings.

Mr Ahern is also promising a "zero tolerance" attitude to crime. He said that, as Prime Minister, he would create 2,000 extra prison places and bring the police up to their full lement of 12,000.

Ahern at his manifesto launch yesterday: "Sinn Fein talks need an IRA ceasefire"

Scots Tories defy party leaders to reassess policies

AN UNOFFICIAL meeting of 70 senior Scottish Conservatives is being held this week-end in defiance of the party

The group of former MEPs, constituency chairmen, councillors and parliamentary candidates drawn from all wings of the party will meet on Sunday to discuss the party's future and to draw up discussion papers on such issues as devolution and the referen-dum Bill, ahead of the Tory conference in Perth. Annabel Goldie, the Scottish party chairwoman, had urged members to keep quiet over internal policy divisions until the conference at the end of June. Arthur Bell, the chairman of the Scottish Tory Reform Group, has ignored the decree and will host the personally invited guests in a marquee at his house outside Siggar, South Lanarkshire.

Although invited, no senior figures from Central Office, including Mrs Goldie, her deputy Jackson Carlow and David McLetchie, President of the Scottish Conservative and Unionist Association, will be attending.

Last week Mrs Goldie made strenuous efforts to end the party's public bickering as the anti-devolution consensus maintained during the election campaign began to col-lapse. She said: "If there are continuing multiple rushes of blood to the head, there will be a collective stroke." The summer conference was the legitimate forum for members to air their views, she said.

Mr Bell, who described himself as a political pragmatist, said yesterday that he was not trying to influence debate at the conference or to form a rebellious caucus to fill the wer vacuum created since the Conservative wipe-out in Scotland at the general

He said that it was vitally important for the rebuilding process to begin as soon as possible. If the party waited until June, the referendum Bill would be law before a policy position had been discussed,

"Montgomery and Eisenhower plotted the D-Day landings in a tent, so I don't see anything unusual in planning the reclamation of Scotland from a marquee," Mr Bell said, "This is meant to be a think-tank. We have suffered the worst defeat in our history and there are fundamental things we need to address, such as how do we build a form in Scotland?" A Scottish parliament was inevitable whether we like it or not" and the Tory party had to begin thinking about how it would face up to "this political reali-ty" when it arrived.

Yesterday Mrs Goldie was not available to comment but a Central Office spokesman said that the gathering was "unhelpful. There will be every opportunity for people to put forward their views at the conference. This is no time for kneejerk reactions, we need to sit down and think things through."

Mr Bell was linked to the downfall of Sir Michael Hirst. the former party chairman, who resigned at the start of the election campaign over allega-tions of a homosexual affair. Sir Michael claimed last week he had been betrayed by members of his own party but refused to mention names. However, it emerged that Mr Bell had alerted the party heirarchy about Sir Michael's alleged past affair. Mr Bell said that he had been the unwilling messenger.

As well as future policy, the two-day gathering at Perth is expected to discuss changes to party organisation.

Tories to demand voting threshold for referendums

By James Landale, political reporter

THE Tories are to demand jority. Similar devolution minimum voting thresholds in the Government's planned devolution referendums in their campaign against devolving powers to Scotland and Wales.

William Hague, the Shadow Welsh Secretary, and Michael Ancram, the Shadow Constitutional Affairs spokesman, said that an agreed minimum number of voters must support the Government's proposals for them to with the question of possible thresholds. A referendum ment's position is that only a with a low turnout could be a ment's position is that only a majority of those who yote is needed for devolution to

Mr Hague said during yes-terday's Commons debate on constitutional matters raised by the Queen's Speech that the Opposition will hable amendments to the Referendums (Scotland and : Wales) Bill demanding a fixed threshold. The Bill, published last Thursday, comes up for its second reading on Wednesday and Thursday. The move is the first indication of how the Tories intend to fight the proposals despite Labour's large Commons maplans were defeated in a fixed threshold was imposed.

with a low turnout could be a highly unsatisfactory method of changing the British consti-tution." He challenged Labour with a low turnout could be a to say if a 20 per cent vote for devolution and even fewer against would be a satisfactory mandate for the changes.

Donald Dewar, the Scottish Secretary, said the demands were depressing. The Tories appear to want to re-visit the horrors of 1978/79," he said. "Why should Scotland be singled out for fancy franchises and artificial obstacles? The Tories impose no such obstacles in the paths of referendums on Europe or other matters close to their heart."

Cabinet cases turned into red phone-boxes

CABINET ministers have been offered the chance to bring their traditional red boxes up to date - with a pocket for a mobile phone. enterprising Cambridgeshire company has made the special boxes for David Blunkett, the blind Education Secretary, after spotting him on television struggling with the regulation cases, which are too small for his braille documents.

Papworth Travel Goods have made him four boxes which are wider than those used for more than 250 years. They took the opportunity to add new features, including a pocket for his mobile phone, dictation machine and cassette tapes. They will be sent. to him over the weekend.

Simon Knocker, the sales manager, said it took the company five working days to complete the task: "We saw it as an opportunity for us to bid for a contract. We contacted his office and were given the chance to give it a go. They were looking for a very tight

Hague promises immediate vote for the grassroots

BY PHILIP WEBSTER POLITICAL EDITOR

WILLIAM HAGUE has offered Conservatives an early chance to back him or sack him if he is chosen to replace John Major next month. He promised yesterday that he would quickly convene a meeting for the party's membership to confirm or reject his selection as leader.

He said: "Should I be elected leader of the party by fellow MPs I will as quickly as possible call a special conference representative of the whole party.:

"At that conference a ballot would be held at which I would seek a mandate, and l would not continue as leader without it.".

His promise came as his leadership rival Stephen Dorrell suggested that the Conservative Party should choose between him and William Hague if it wanted to break free from the failure of the past five years. The former Health Secretary challenged Mr Hague to a face-to-face

Court fight by Tory who thinks he won

By JILL SHERMAN, CHIEF POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

A TORY Health Minister who lost his Commons seat by two votes is mounting a High Court challenge to force another count. The action by Gerry Malone could mean a rerun of the election for voters in Winchester, Hampshire

Mr Malone lost the constituency to Mark Oaten, a Liberal Democrat, after two recounts. The ousted Conservative is particularly con-cerned that 55 ballot papers were rejected as void because they did not have an official mark that should be stamped on all papers.

Yesterday Mr Malone said that after taking legal advice,-he had decided to lodge a petition in the High-Court to seek a recount or scrutiny of the votes recorded in the election. He said: "It is iny understanding that a majority of void ballots were cast in my favour and, had they been counted, I would have won the election. My purpose is to . ensure that the result properly reflects the intentions of

Mr Oaten said: "Mr Malone is now seeking through the courts to overturn the will of the people of Winchester." Mr Malone may be helped by legal precedent in the case of Billie Morgan, a Tory candidate defeated by nine votes in the 1973 Greater London Council election. She protested that if votes declared void because of the absence of the mark had been counted,

Suicide overshadows debut visit to prison

BY STEWART TENDLER CRIME COMRESPONDENT

JACK STRAW's first visit to a prison as Home Secretary was marred yesterday when an inmate committed suicide in his cell just hours before his arrival. Shaun Harvey, 22, was found by Winchester Prison staff shortly after 6am, hanged in his single cell by a bed sheet attached to cell bars. He had left

Harvey, the twentieth prisoner to kill himself this year, was sentenced to a three-month sentence for drugs, theft and affray on Wednesday.

As Mr Straw toured the prison he said the death was a profoundly depressing situation for all concerned. He offered his sympathies to the mother of the prisoner and recalled that when he was at school a classmate committed suicide. It was an experience which he said had "remained with me all of my life".

Mr Straw was referring to the death of a boy called Peter Hartley, 15, who gassed himself in May 1963 at Brentwood School. An inquest was told that he may have killed himself because he was agonising over being a homo-

The boy crept down at night and killed himself in a study in Otway House shared by Mr Straw and several other pupils. Mr Straw was told about the death the next day and glimpsed the body. During his visit the Home Secretary confirmed he planned measures to stabilise the soaring prison population, which now totals 60,431. He said he would be examining ways of cutting the length of time defendants spent in jail on remand awaiting trial and would also cut the number of fine defaulters who were sent to prison.

1 don't want to see anybody in prison who can be sensibly punished for their crimes outside and do not pose a danger to the public. If we are to achieve that, we have to raise confidence in community punishments. It's because of declining confidence that I think many sentencers decided to shift from community punishments to

The Home Secretary said too many defendants spent too long on remand awaiting trial. About 20 per cent of inmates in England and Wales were awaiting trial and Mr Straw said he was looking at a variety of proposals to reduce delays. He said he was interested in the Scottish system of remand population control. Under that scheme remand inmates cannot be held in custody beyond 110 days without trial.

Mr Straw also made it clear he has not entirely rejected the idea of using HMP Weare, the prison ship moored Portland harbour in Dorset. Later he visited the ship and said a final decision on using it had yet to be made. He said he would hear representations from local councillors, who have opposed the vessel, and study a report from a marine expert prepared for the Prison Officers' Association, Mr Straw said the alternative to the ship would be to use police cells, which would be unacceptable. The size of the accommodation on the ship was better than many prisons including Winchester.

Prescott has hard choices over future of transport

BY MICHAEL BINYON

JOHN PRESCOTT, the Deputy Prime Minister and environment supremo, will this weekend analyse the difficult choices for roads and railways that were laid before him by his transport ministers at a policy-making meeting at Chevening yesterday.

The transport team must decide soon what kind of enhanced regulatory authority it wants to supervise the privatised railways; whether to cut further the road-building programme; and how the demands of transport and the environment can be better reconciled. But the most immediate decision is on the London

The huge cuts in funds for the Underground, announced by Kenneth Clarke last November, have left the system short of £700 million in infrastructure investment. The Underground announced the immediate scrapping of doz-ens of capital projects and the indefinite postponement of many improvements.

During the election cam-paign Labour flatly ruled out the "wholesale privatisation" of the system, a proposal finally made by Sir George Young, the Tory Transport Secretary, on the eve of the campaign. Labour spokes-men insisted that improving public transport would be a priority, but gave no indica-tion where to find the money. Mr Prescott has now been given three options by the

the next five years; bringing in private money to pay for repairs under the Private Finance Initiative: or privatising the system, either wholly or by keeping London authority and contracting out the running of the services.

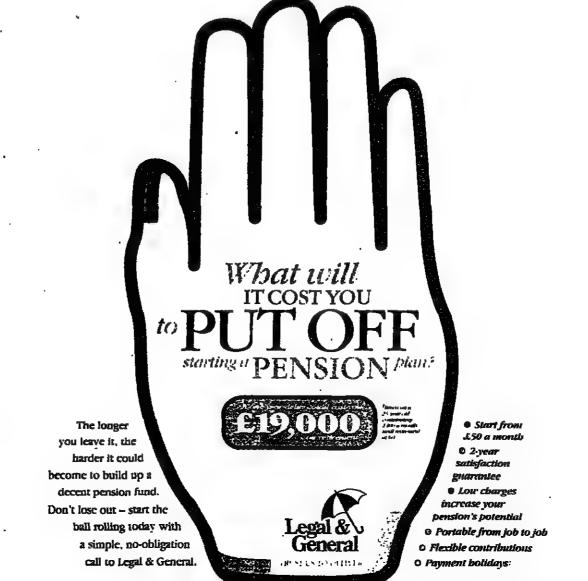

All three are being studied by Glenda Jackson, the minis operations. The first would swallow up to £400 million a year in capital spending for five years. The Underground says it would then be selffinancing, able to generate from its own receipts the funds needed for capital costs. The obstacles are Gordon Brown and the Treasury.

The private finance option is unrealistic. The Underground already makes more use of such finance than any other state-run undertaking. The money would still have to be repaid

The third option would stick in the throats of many leftwingers and Londoners. A single monopoly handed to the private sector would not stimulate competition. Separating track from train operations, like the break-up of British Rail, would be extremely difficult in such an interlinked system. Finding investors might be difficult. Finally, Mr Prescott knows that with project after project being axed because the money has dried up, London voters will not wait long before demanding a reversal of Mr Clarke's cuts.

Face to face with a dictator: President Mobutu celebrating 25 years of independence in June 1985, left; fêted by fellow despot Idi Amin, the Ugandan President, in 1972; and feeling the strain during the endgame of his reign this month

Three decades of chaos under lord of misrule

Sam Kiley charts the rise and fall of President Mobutu of Zaire, the longest-ruling of modern Africa's kleptocrats

MOBUTU SESE SEKO yesterday slipped out of Kinshasa and power in Zaire after 32 years of rule for which he will be remembered as a brutal despot, a brilliant manipulator and one of the greatest thieves of the 20th century, for whom chaos has always been a magic word.

Joseph-Desire Mobutu — as he was called until he "Africanised" his name in 1972 came from humble origins in the Equateur province in the north of a colony left in a shambles by its Belgian masters who fled, leaving only lo indigenous graduates in a country 80 times the size of their own.

For the young non-commis-sioned officer, who had started out as a freelance reporter for a French press agency, the uprising against Belgian officers in newly independent Congo, and chaos which followed, was a golden opportuleft-wing Prime Minister, raised him to the rank of colonel at the age of only 30, and made him head of the armed forces which Belgian officers feared to lead. Largely ineffective as a military leader, the young Colonel Mobutu developed a sense of opportunity. In 1961, after the country was torn apart by secessionist rebellions and arguments between Lumumba and Joseph Kasavubu, the President, he took power in a military coup and ruled for a year in which he discovered he was too young for absolute power but developed a taste for its trappings.

The Congo continued to be riven by civil wars and secessionist uprisings in Kivu and Katanga (now Shaba) until 1965, when Mr Mobutu saw his greatest chance, again the result of chaotic politics and rowing between Moise Tshombe, the Prime Minister, and Kasavubu. This time he

PRESIDENT Mobutu will be succeeded by a transitional authority which will run Zaire for an unspecified period until elections take place, according to the proposals discussed on Thursday.

Laurent Kabila, the rebel leader, agreed in talks with President Mandela of South Africa and Muhammad Sahnoun, the United Nations special envoy, to give Mr Mobutu until Monday to study the proposals. Mr Kabila, whose rebeis bashi headquarters last night and began an immediate meeting with his "Cabinet". It is understood that Mr Kabila and his Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire will dominate the interim authority. The only concession offered to the cancer-stricken dictator is that he can stay in the country once he stands down. Although he has re-peatedly confounded popular opinion by returning home after seeking medical treat-ment in Europe and attending peace talks in Congo, the ailing President is thought unlikely to accept the offer.

member of his family who explained how his close assoriates made their millions by ripping off the old man".

Mobuty would ask one of us to go to the bank and take out a million. We'd go to an intermediary and tell him to get five million; he would go to the bank with Mobutu's authority, and take out ten. Mobuto got one, and we took the other nine," he said chuckling over a beer in Kinshasa before his "cash cow" left.

But opposition to his rule continued to threaten to undermine Mobutu Sese Seko Kuku Ngebendu wa za Banga, the name he took when he banned "Christian" names and "Western dress", which he replaced with Nehru-style suits in 1972. The year before he had changed the name of the Congo to Zaire. In 1977 he faced another armed uprising in Katanga from remnants of Tshombe's defeated gendarmes. The West might have let him be toppled. but Washington needed Zaire as a base for covert operations with the Union for the Total Independence of Angola (Unita) next door. France and Morocco sent troops to put down the rebellion. Safe in the knowledge that the Cold War would keep him in power, Mr Mobuto continued to extend his cult of personality by preading rumours that he had cuckolded his opponents. Merabers of his family still believe that Ettenne Tshi-sekedi, leader of Zaire's civilian opposition, hates the Big Man because "he did it with Etienne's wife on the kitchen table in front of the servants", as a former Information Min-

With the end of the Cold War, he lost his support from the West and turned for solace to a team of 25 witch doctors from Berrin and Senegal. They told him to igaore the symptoms of prostate cancer, which has now spread to his bones.

For most of this decade he took a back seat, manipulating his opponents from behind the scenes and, when they got too powerful, by ordering his troops to sear Zaire's major cities to pieces in looting rampages in 1991 and 1993.

But the hubris and rule by chaos was his ultimate undoing. His nemesis, Laurent Kabila, grew out of a Tursi rebellion in South Kivu, 1:000 miles from the capital, and exposed the myth of Zaire as a functioning state.

Colonel admits medals deceit

FROM TUNKU VARADARAJAN

THE soldier-turned-journalist who hounded the US Navy's top ranking of ficer. Admiral Mike Boorda, over the use of unauthorised combat medals, has conceded that he has also worn decorations that he did not earn. Boorda killed himself after the affair was made

Clinton minimum wage call stirs up row on 'workfare'

FROM BRONWEN MADDOX IN WASHINGTON

THE White House has called for people in "workfare" prograntines in be paid the mini-muni wage, inflaming the row over one of the most contentious parts of America's huge welfare reform experiment and drawing furious reactions from Republican and Democratic state governors.

The outcome will be watched closely by the Blair Government, which has drawn on American ideas for its proposed shake-up of the welfare statement also supports a minimum wage.

Governors and authors of last year's Remublican-backed last year's Republican-backed welfare reform laws said that the White House's long-awaited interpretation could jeopardise the nationwide experiment. Under "workfare" schemes, people must perform community service or public sec-tor work in order to receive welfare. Workfare is generally directed towards poorer, less employable people than the "welfare-to-work" scheme, which aim to prise people off welfare and into proper jobs.

Under the new laws, states are allowed enormous discretion over designing incentives to reduce welfare rolls. At their most radical, such as in Wis-consin, these schemes cut off benefits entirely after five years. According to President Clinton's proposal, people performing workfare would be credited with the minimum wage of $4.75 (£2.90) an hour. To receive the average welfare benefit of about $370 a month, they would have to work only 19 hours a week. Critics of Mr Clinton's decision rushed to point out that it apparently contradicts the new welfare laws, which require people to work 20 hours a week in 1997, rising to 30 hours by 2000. Some argued yesterday that the White House was wrong to treatworkfare jobs as proper jobs. when many of them were "make work" tasks in the local community, such as sweeping. streets or raking leaves.

The decision was widely seen as a peace offering by the Gingrich starts to pay ethics fine Washington: Newt Gingrich has paid the first $50,000 (£31,000) of his $300,000 ethics fine out of his personal funds (Bronwen Maddox writes). The Speaker of the House of Representatives said that he will borrow no more than $150,000 from Bob Dole, the former Republican offered to lend him the unions which have seen many of their favourite causes jettisoned as Mr Clinton has moved the Democratic agenda towards the centre. Leaders of the public service unions have put their jobs on the line over

Although welfare reform may offer the unions a chance to recruit new members, they see this as poor compensation for the threats the reforms may pose to existing workers. They have bitterly opposed workfare on the ground that it allows state governments to employ non-union members at below the minimum wage.

Mr Clinton's decision.

which is likely to be challenged by governors, is the second victory in a week for the unions: In New York, a state judge ruled on Monday that: workfare participants must be paid the "prevailing wage" for public-sector employees, up in $9 an hour. Unions and state governors are now urgently investigating whether other labour laws, such as unemployment insurance, will also cover people in workfare schemes.

Meanwhile, a new government study of the nationwide welfare reforms found that 18,000 families had been pushed off the welfare rolls in the past few years because they failed to find work.

Abortion defeat for President in Senate

BY BRONWEN MADDOX

THE US Senate has rejected a White House-backed bid for a moderate curb on abortion sights, clearing the way for a Republican Bill next week which seeks wider curbs and makes no exceptions for the health of the mother.

The abortion debate has been given new impetus by last November's elections, which maintained Republican control of both the Senate and the House of Representatives and replaced several leading moderate Republicans with conservatives.

The Democratic Bill proposed by Torn Daschle, leader of the Democratic senators, was defeated 64-36 after eight hours of impassioned debate, It would have represented a landmark in curtailing abortion rights by banning all abortions after the foetus was viable", at 23 to 28 weeks. Mr Clinton backed the Bill because of a clause allowing acceptions when the woman's health was in danger. He has vetoed a previous Republican Bill lacking that clause, and opposes on the same grounds the Republican Bill to be debated next week. That Bill aims to ban "partial birth" abortion, in which the foetus's skull is crushed.

The House has already passed the measure, and the Senate looks likely to pass it. But yesterday it appeared that the Bill would fall short of the two-thirds support needed to override the President's veto.

China keeps guard against exodus to capitalist colony

FROM JAMES PRINGLE IN GUANGZHOU

THE newspaper headline read Guangdong anti-migrawere, unusually for China, scenes of heavily armed para-military police in steel helmets battling angry young men breaking down a barbed-wire barrier. "A fight between pol-icemen and illegal migrants," one picture caption said.

It was, of course, only an exercise - a real demonstration would never be reported in the contemporary Chinese press - and Hong Kong was not mentioned, but it was clearly what the authorities had in mind.

What the pictures showed may be the worst nightmare of provincial Communist Party officials here in Guangzhou. as Canton is now called. But such future attempts to breach the border fence of Hong Kong, which lies 70 miles south of here, cannot be an unimaginable event, or such an exercise would not have Guangdong province, bordering Hong Kong, was long touted as China's greatest success story. There was even talk then of the Pearl River north of Hong Kong, joining the four Asian "dragons" of Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea and Taiwan.

These days, although sala-ries are higher here than elsewhere in China and the cranes and the pile-drivers are still working round the clock in Guangzhou, talk is more measured. Zhang Gaoli, the Vice-Governor of this province of 70 million, said that growth in the current five-year plan was an estimated II per cent. This is down from 23 per cent in 1993 but still high.

The Shenzhen-Guangzhou six-lane expressway is a superb engineering project. It seems a good way to see the Chinese economic miracle at first hand. But the traveller soon notices that many of the blocks of flats and factories springing up stand empty.

Every second building in Guangdong seems to be a small-scale Caesar's Palace. straight from Las Vegas, one of the foreign cities that a majority of Chinese say they most want to visit. These are vast karaoke emporiums, and during the daylight hours bored young women hang about outside, listlessly wait-ing for evening when the clients arrive. Modernisation of industry has been neglected in favour of funds spent on glitzy building projects, and in many towns in Guangdong that problem is only too visi-ble. Some high-profile foreign ventures, such as Peugeot, have not fared well, and acid rain has left the environment in a pitiful state.

Britain, once an "imperialist villain" in local legend, re-opened its consulate-general here early this year in a few cramped hotel rooms rather than the spacious buildings of the last century. Ian Wellfare, the consul-general, is upbeat about the city.
"People tend to take one look at Guangzhou, sniff the foul fumes, and give the thumbs down," he said, "Certainly there is a poisonous cocktail of pollution, but Guangzhou is abuzz and its people friendly.

"While there is a problem, and a drop in foreign investment last year attributable to new import taxes and inflation, most foreign businessmen are happy here and growth rates are still high by British standards. There are more than 50 British companies here and more are coming," he added.

Beijing plans bigger, better Hong Kong to ease chronic squeeze on land

FROM CATHERINE FIELD

HONG KONG'S incoming government, facing a chronic land shortage and a surging population, is contemplating a novel solu-tion: moving part of the territory

After July I, Hong Kong will come under Chinese sovereignty but will retain its distinct way of life and capitalist system, with an autonomy defined by a border fence running along its colonial boundary with the mainland.

the Chief Executive-designate, say plans are now advanced for Hong Kong to solve its land crisis by buying a huge swath of Shenzhen. the neighbouring special economic zone, and building on it a vast residential and industrial complex that would be inhabited only by Hong Kong residents.

The area would include schools. supermarkets, hospitals and welfare centres managed along Hong Kong lines. The residents would hold special permits giving them the right to move back to Hong Kong any time they wanted, but while on Chinese soil they would People's Republic. The scheme would have the advantage of easing pressure on Hong Kong's bousing market while at the same time providing cash for the authorities in Shenzhen. "What I have in mind is to co-operate with Shenzhen, to have a border zone that is in Hong Kong and Shenzhen. We will be able to operate our business much cheaper there than in Hong Kong," said Henry Tang, a member of Mr Tung's Cabinet-in-waiting and architect of the expansion plan. "The bulk of the money for the project would come from the Hong Kong Housing Associ-ation and private developers."

Among his suggestions, Mr Tang has recommended that mainlanders meeting the residency requirements for the territory could live in the Hong Kong exclave while waiting for their final clearance to enter.

"A lot of Hong Kong permanent residents have been waiting for Kong for ten years, and there is no light at the end of the tunnel for them. They could live there and have access to Hong Kong services," he said.

Mr Tung has already named housing as a key area for action after he succeeds Chris Patten, the Governor, on July I. Hong Kong's population of 6.4 million is already one of the most cramped in the world. It is expected to grow by 30 per cent to 8.2 million by 2016, mainly because of an influx of mainlanders. But this figure does thousands of Chinese who will have the right to live in Hong Kong after July 1 because spouses. or relatives are living in the territory. They face a long and agonising wait because of a system that admits only 150 settlers a day into Hong Kong. Building the Shenzhen complex, whose size and date of completion have not been made clear, would help to clear the backlog of people on this waiting list.

However, the scheme would raise the question of conflict of interest. The cost of infrastructure.

roads and sewerage, and also access to the rest of the mainland, may be borne by Hong Kong. There is already a suspicion in Hong Kong that Beljing views the territory as a fat treasure chest that motherland needs it.

Despite Hong Kong's wealth, it faces a potentially perilous probiem in its shortage of land. Housing prices rose by an average of 30 per cent last year, placing home ownership beyond the home ownership beyond to arcoms of tens of thousands

Nationalists spurn hearings after Tutu accuses de Klerk

SOUTH Africa's National Party was set on a collision course with the commission investigating apartheid-era crimes when the panel's chairman, Archbishop Desmond Tutu, accused former President de Klerk of "gross human rights abuses".

After the outburst the National Party suspended participation in the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and threatened legal action against the archbishop.

Archbishop Tutu choked back tears when he said he was "devastated" by Mr de Klerk's continued refusal to admit he knew of state-sponsored killings while in office. He said there was "an ava-

"I feel sorry for him, I am devastated," Archbishop Tutu said after another appearance by Mr de Klerk at a hearing on Wednesday. All that is required is to say that 'we believed in this policy, but it is a policy that brought about all of this suffering. It is a policy that killed people. Not by accident, deliberately. It was planned'.'

Dr Alex Boraine, deputy chairman of the commission. said that Mr de Klerk's testimony had been contradictory. Deal grants Russians unique Nato access while denying veto DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

THE text of the new Nato-Russia security deal guarantees Moscow a unique insight into alliance affairs but withholds from Moscow arry right of veto.

The wording of the text, which was formally approved by Nato ambassadors in Brussels yesterday, makes it clear that, although Russia will be granted special consultation rights on security issues, the alliance will continue to have total freedom to take whatever action it feels necessary, with or without Moscow's approval-

This was considered by Nato to he a vital part of the Nato-Russia agreement, and when Javier Solana, the alliance's Secretary-General, returned from Moscow on Wednesday after the successful negotiations with Yevgeni Primakov, the Russian Foreign Minister, he was given a standing ovation.

The clause in the text which underlines Nato's freedom to act belies the impression given by President Yeltsin that Moscow would have a defining role in alliance decision-making.

The new agreement, which will be signed in Paris on May 27, will be called the "Founding Act on Mutual Relations, Co-operation and Security between Nato and the Russian Federation".

As part of the new consultation arrangements, Russia will appoint an ambassador to Nato and will send liaison officers to some of the alliance command headquarters. Nato will also have liaison officers in Moscow and other central command centres, although not in regional headquarters, such as the vast nuclear submarine facility at Murmansk on the Kola peninsula. Apart from a Russian Ambassador to Nato, Moscow will also send a civilian and military staff to Brussels. There will also be a secretariat to serve the new Nato-Russia Permanent Joint Council, the proposed forum for all consultations.

The Nato building will be so crowded that arrangements are being made to rent adjoining premises to house the Russians, possibly connected by a private access road. By 1999, there will also be at least three new members of the alliance: Poland, the Czech Republic and Hungary. After studying the agreed text of the new deal with Russia, senior Nato sources said: "There is nothing in it which will make us choke. It includes an unambiguous statement that, after consultation with Russia, Nato will still be free to act as it sees fit. This was the bottom line for the alliance and the new security accord with Russia message in the agreement is quite However, they acknowledged that the deal would give the Russians a "unique and special We have also told the Russians that this agreement is just the beginning and that, as the relationship improves, their role could become even more significant," one source said.

On a visit to Bonn yesterday, Señor Solana underlined that the

would not prevent the alliance from developing military infra-structures in the new member countries. Nato has included in the text a declaration that it has no intention or plan to deploy nuclear weapons or substantial conventional forces on the territory of new member states.

Yesterday's approval by alliance ambassadors of the text of the Nato-Russia act was unanimous. It has yet to be formally approved

The minister, who con-firmed that he would move quickly to self off some of Bonn's stake in Deutsche Telekom, said that the emergency measures would help to offset the financial burden of German unification. However, Ingrid Matthaeus-Maier, of the Social Democrat opposition said: The German Government is facing an un-precedented imancial crisis. You are making a mockery of us all." Although Herr Waige! brushed off the criticism, there were clear signs that his ambitious scheme to keep Bonn on course for economic and monetary union could destroy German trust in the one of many voices yesterday urging extreme caution in the use of gold reserves. For years the Bundesbank resisted pressure from Social Democrat politicians to increase the value of its gold.

It has been able to fend off these appeals partly because Bundesbank law says gold should be valued at its purchase price, and the bank bought cheaply. "Now Waigel is up to his neck in water and the bank is regarded as a gold mine," Dr Nölling said.

Financial experts were yes terday trying to work out how Herr Waigel could make use of the 95 million ounces of gold reserves. Most analysis argued that the Bundesbank law would have to be changed by the summer. However, Bundesbank accounts run until December 31; a transfer of profits to the Government spring 1998, which would be too late for Germany to achieve the finely tuned arithmetic of monetary union. Another solution might be for the Bundesbank to sell some gold and immediately buy it back, which would allow it to make a transfer within the present financial year.

Bartering begins to forge 'son of Maastricht' pact

FROM CHARLES BREMNER IN BRUSSELS

THE countdown to a revamped Maastricht treaty began in earnest yesterday when negotiators sought to clear the ground for a final trade-off among European Union leaders in Amsterdam. After 14 months of hard grind, the imminent deadline and the arrival of a more Euro-friendly British Govern-ment have fuelled hopes that the mid-June summit will produce a deal which retunes the Maastricht machine and sets the scene for shifting the EU frontier eastwards into the former Soviet bloc. Doug Henderson, Britain's new EU Minister, yesterday joined his 14 fellow negotiators near Maastricht in an attempt by the Dutch to narrow continuing differences over ways to equip the Union with greater powers over crime, frontiers and defence policy. In return for its exemption over borders. Landon will be expected to give ground in its resistance to endowing the EU with a defence mandate.

France and Germany are pressing for the EU to take over the Western European Union, the European wing of Nato, but the scheme is likely to be diluted in the face of opposition from Britain and the neutral states. The hopeful mood at the intergovernmental conference (IGC) contrasts with the pessimism that reigned earlier this year amid talk of deferring the treaty to another summit in the autumn. The main potential spanner in the works for the Dutch EU presidency is the French general election, which ends only two weeks before the summit. The emerg ing "son of Maastricht" falls short of the political makeover desired by Germany and other federal-minded states. German officials are grumbling that the Blair administration is almost as resistant to change as its Tory predecessor. The Government is more sceptical than the Major team about the wisdom of setting up a system that would allow states to club together with new joint policies. leaving out unwilling

The new treaty will go some way to steamlining the way the EU does business and seeks to answer continental criticism that Maastricht detached the Union from its peoples. Among features aimed at "bringing Europe closer to the citizens" is an agreement on lifting internal frontiers, and pooling forces to administer visas and fight

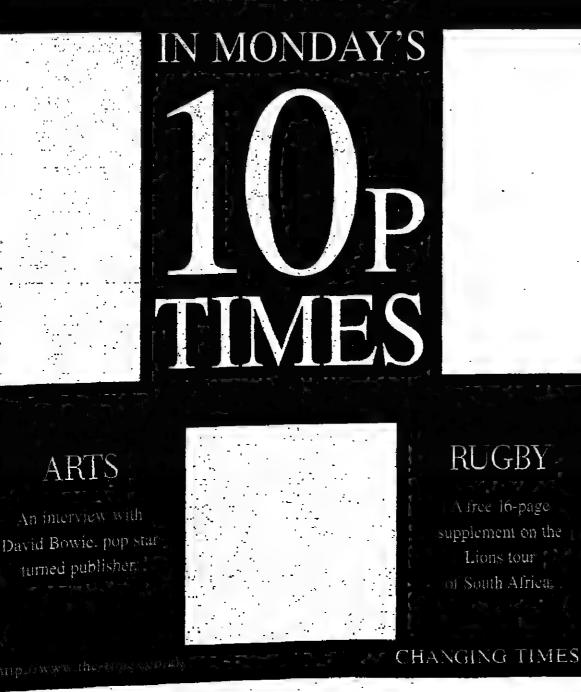

Britain has been promised an exemption from common border control and will be allowed to stay out of moves to centralise some police work. The Union's desire to respond to public anxiety is also on display in an "employment chapter" which will commit governments' jobs policies to joint scrutiny. Allegations of EU paralysis over foreign policy will be only partly answered by a system of "constructive abstention", which skirts the problem of a blocking veto. EU leaders stage a dress rehearsal for Amsterdam when they assemble for a one-day session on the Dutch

Warrior for the Front line

THIRTY years ago. Jean-Jacques Susini was an exile from France, where two death sentences were hanging over him, the second for organising a plot to assassinate President de Gaulle. As one of the principal leaders of the Secret Army Organisation (OAS) — the group of rebel French soldiers and hardline Algerian pieds noirs who had launched a brutal terror campaign to resist Algerian independence — M Susini was one of the most wanted men

Today the Government in Paris has fresh reason to fear him, for M Susini has emerged from obscurity to stand as a candidate for the extreme-right National Front in north Marseilles. In a constituency of raging unem-

The decision of Jean-Marie Le Pen, the Front leader, to parachute his friend into Marseilles was clever. In the last parliamentary election here, 45 per cent of secondround votes went to the Front. ### Tapie hones passing skills in fraud case

FRENCH sports fans have been treated this week to a virtuose display of passing the buck by former officials of the Marseilles football team.

At issue is the question of who, precisely, was responsible for the disappearance of Fri00 million (£11 million) from the accounts of the club, which won the European Championship in 1993. Among those charged are Bernard Tapie, the disgraced former Socialist minister and tycoon-turned-film-star, his former finance manager, his personal assistant. the ex-manager of his business empire and Michel Hidalgo, one-time French national football coach and sporting director at Marseilles.

In the first few, baffling days of testimony, every co-defendant in turn denied responsibility, blamed every other co-defendant or insisted they were obeying orders. As usual the flamboyant Tapie was most eloquent. "I set the menu and the others did the cooking," he said, explaining why he was not responsible for what happened to the missing cash.

The charges against Tapie — of fraud, misuse of company funds and falsifying documents - carry a maximum sentence of five years in prison. Like the other members of his former management team, the fallen football boss has shown rare passing skills, but even if he avoids the latest tackle by the French legal system M Tapie is likely to be off games for some time. ## Italy steps up hunt for killer who stalks lonely widows

FROM RICHARD OWEN IN ROME

POLICE in southern Italy said yesterday that they were hunting a serial killer who preys on elderly women, mostly widows, living on their own. The killer - assumed to be a man has struck seven times in the past year in Puglia in the heel of Italy, most recently on Wednesday when Pasqua Ludovico, 86, who lived on her own, was found in a pool of blood in her ground floor flat at Castellaneta, near Taranto. As in other serial killings, the murders follow a pattern; the victims have all been women in their seventies and eighties, and have all had their throats cut.

The killer does not interfere with them sexually, and although the flats are ransacked, with drawers and cupboards turned out, no valuables are taken. In all seven cases, police said; the bodies were laid out neatly on the floor and bore no signs of bruising or fractures. The killings have all taken place on a Wednesday or Thursday evening, at a time when there was a big football match on

Italy is still haunted by memories of the "Monster of Florence", the serial killer who murdered courting couples in the woods around Florence between 1968 and 1985. In 1994 Pietro Pacciani, an elderly farm labourer, was convicted of the murders. Last year he was freed on appeal, but he is due to be retried in the

automn after new evidence from witnesses and alleged fellow members of a gang of murderous "Peeping Toms". Three of his alleged accomplices go on trial separately The first murder by the man the Italian press has dubbed the "Monster of Puglia" took place in Lucera, near Foggia, in April last year when an 85year-old woman was killed. In five of the murders the killer has used a knife and in two cases a screwdriver.

One theory is that the killer dresses as a figure of trust. perhaps a priest. In one murder, police found a cross and a photograph of the victim's grandson carefully placed on her body.

The minister, who confirmed that he would move quickly to sell off some of Bonn's stake in Deutsche Telekom, said that the emergency measures would help to offset the financial burden of German unification. However. Ingrid Matthaeus-Maler, of the Social Democrat opposi-tion said: "The German Government is facing an un-precedented financial crisis." You are making a mockery of us all." Although Herr Wargel brushed off the criticism, there were clear signs that his ambitious scheme to keep Bonn on course for economic and monetary union could destroy German trust in the project

An article in the mass circulation Bild newspaper described his proposal to raise the value of Bundesbank gold reserves as "witchcraft". Even Lamberto Dini, the Italian Foreign Minister, said the German plan could jeopardise monetary union.

Why not change the whole pessent framework for the European General Bank? In any case far too east to start European monetals thing. Dr. Nolling was one of many voices vesterday urging extreme caution in the use of gold reserves. For years the Bundesbank resisted pressure from Social Democrat politicians to increase the value of its gold.

It has been able to fend off these appeals partly because Bundesbank law says gold should be valued at its purchase price, and the bank bought cheaply. "Now Waigel is up to his neck in water and the bank is regarded as a gold mine," Dr Nölling said.

Financial experts were yesterday trying to work out how Herr Waigel could make use of the 95 million ounces of gold reserves. Most analysts argued that the Bundesbank law would have to be changed by the summer. However, Bundesbank accounts run until December 31; a transfer of profits to the Government could be expected only by spring 1998, which would be too late for Germany to achieve the finely tuned arithmetic of monetary union. Another solution might be for the Bundesbank to sell some gold and immediately buy it back which would allow it to make a transfer within the

FROM CHARLES BREMNER IN BRUSSELS

THE countdown to a revamped Maastricht treaty began in earnest yesterday when negotiators sought to clear the ground for a final trade-off among European Union leaders in Amsterdam. After 14 months of hard grind, the imminent deadline and the arrival of a more Euro-friendly British Government have fuelled hopes that the mid-June summit will produce a deal which retunes the Maastricht machine and sets the scene for shifting the EU frontier eastwards into the former Soviet bloc.

Doug Henderson, Britain's new EU Minister, yesterday inined his 14 fellow negotiators near Maastricht in an attempt by the Dutch to narrow continuing differences over ways to equip the Union with greater powers over crime, frontiers and defence policy. In return for its exemption over borders. London will be expected to give ground in its resistance to endowing the EU with a defence mandate.

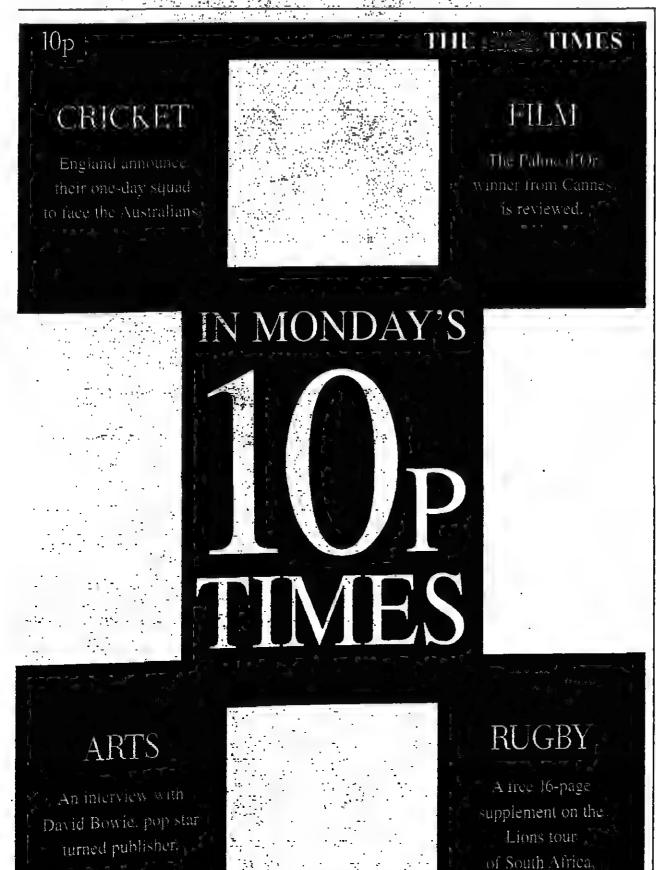

France and Germany are pressing for the EU to take over the Western European Union, the European wing of Nato, but the scheme is likely to be diluted in the face of opposition from Britain and the neutral states.

The hopeful mood at the intergovernmental conference (IGC) contrasts with the pessimism that reigned earlier this year amid talk of deferring the treaty to another summit in the autumn. The main potential spanner in the works for the Dutch EU presidency is the French general election. which ends only two weeks before the summit. The emerging "son of Maastricht" falls makeover desired by Germany and other federal-minded states. German officials are grumbling that the Blair administration is almost as resistant to change as its Tory predecessor. The Government is more sceptical than the Major team about the wisdom of setting up a system that together with new joint policies, leaving out unwilling members.

The new treaty will go some way to steamlining the way the EU does business and seeks to answer continental criticism that Maastricht detached the Union from its peoples. Among features aimed at "bringing Europe closer to the citizens™ is an agreement on lifting internal frontiers, and pooling forces to administer visas and fight

Britain has been promised an exemption from common border control and will be allowed to stay out of moves to centralise some police work. The Union's desire to respond to public anxiety is also on display in an "employment chapter" which will commit governments' jobs policies to joint scrutiny. Allegations of EU paralysis over foreign policy will be only partly answered by a system of "constructive abstention", which skirts the problem of a blocking veto. EU leaders stage a dress rehearsal for Amsterdam when they assemble for a one-day session on the Dutch North Sea coast next Friday.

The reformer all Russians love to hate

few weeks ago the regu-lars of a Surrey pub were bemused by the spectacle of Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev drinking a pint of bitter at their bar. Though he genially signed the menu, the former Soviet leader still stands on his dignity. Accompanied by four bodyguards, he likes to be addressed by his defunct presidential title, and gives the impression of a man convinced of his destiny.

Yet the collapse of Gorbachev's personal prestige among his coun-trymen has been as emphatic as the ruin of the empire over which he presided between 1985 and 1991. Today in Russia hardly anyone has a kind word for him: communists. nationalists and democrats are united only by their contempt. In last year's presidential elections he polled less than I per cent.

So why is Gorbachev so unpopular in the country which he helped to liberate? He appears unable to explain it, judging from his Mem-oirs. When asked this question by Clive Anderson during his visit here last year, he turned it around:

Why am I so popular in the West?" Perhaps the adulation which Gorbachev continues to receive abroad has made it harder for him to comprehend his low esteem in Russia. He seems to believe that the people will recall him from the wilderness, like a Churchill or de Gaulle. On the face of it, that should not be impossible. There are

plenty of potential votes among the malcontents of Yeltsin's Russia: bluecollar workers, the unemployed, the impoverished pensioners and intelligentsia. A marriage of convenience with Aleksandr Lebed or Grigori Yavlinsky -both of whom were promoted by Gorbachev - could in theory propel the fallen leader back to the centre stage of Russian politics. Yet as every Russian knows, that will never come to pass. Gorbachev is politically dead and it would be suicide for any of the major players in Yeltsin's succession to associate his name with theirs.

There is a deeper explanation for the strength of feeling against Gorbachev than the one which is usually advanced: that he has become a scapegoat for the crisis in tion is, I think, to be found in Russian culture and history.

To be sure. Gorbachev is blamed for the chaos which has ensued from the collapse of communism. Although the fall in average living standards, the crime and the corruption are much more the result of Yeltsin's policies, they are seen to stem from Gorbachev's reforms.

In a deeply polarised society, moreover, there is little sympathy for Gorbachev's "middle way". Communists and Russian nationalists cannot forgive him for destroying the Soviet Union, and many denounce him as an agent of the West. But democrats and non-Russian nationalists believe his reforms aimed to strengthen communism and deceive the West (which they saw as their ally) into an acceptance of the Soviet regime. There is a parallel in Russian history here. Gorbachev's real strength as a reformer was manifested inside the party, in his ability to manage its diversions and reset its agenda surreptitiously to avoid the sort of head-on clash with the hardliners which had brought down Khrushchev. Gorbachev's talents, in other words, were not geared towards the new world of mass democratic politics. He may be compared in this respect to Petr Stolypin, the Prime Minister of Russia between 1906 and 1911. Both men were bravely committed to the reform of an old and decaying autocratic system of which they were products, yet both failed because they approached it with too many blinkers from that monolithic, bureaucratic world.

Like Stolypin, Gorbachev did nothing to compete with the democratic forces largely created by his reforms. By failing to seek a democratic mandate for his presi-dency, he emphasised the fact that he had been selected to that post by the discredited nomenklatura, the party bureaucracy. When he was elected President of Russia his authority was further undermined.

Even more decisively, Gorb-achev failed to realise the importance of founding a new party, or of splitting off the social democratic wing of the Communist Party, as a base of mass support for his reforms. Like Stolypin, he tried to impose his reforms from above and never really moved outside the old bureaucracy to mobilise support. Once that system collapsed he was left without a legacy.

Gorbachev's refusal to step out from the shadows of the Commu-nist apparatus is another reason for the Russian people's deep mistrust of him. Russians often complain that they never really knew where Gorbachev stood. Did he want to end the communist system or reform it? What was his role in the bloody suppression of the Baltic and Georgian nationalists? And what was he really thinking during the putsch of August 1991? Many people feel they have not had proper answers.

The Russian people have a long tradition of mistrusting secret rulers. Peasants blamed the cruel actions of the Tsar on the "evil boyars", the noble bureaucrats, or "dark forces" such as Rasputin, who supposedly surrounded him. Yeltsin in this sense has more in common with popular traditions of political culture. People know his faults but feel that he is at least a devil they know. Yeltsin's faults his heavy drinking and exuberance, his crude peasant manners and mode of speech - they may even recognise as their own.

orbachev, by contrast, comes across as a clever bureaucrat — and so as duplicitous. Against all the evience. Russians still believe that he must have been involved in the August putsch, that he sympathised with the hardline plotters and waited to see if they succeeded before deciding what to do.

Here too there is a parallel in history. The Kornilov putsch of August 1917 was, like that of 1991. an attempt to compel the premier, Aleksandr Kerensky, to support a state of emergency and suppress democracy. Although Kerensky, like Gorbachev, undermined the coup by refusing to become its figurehead, he himself was widely blamed for it, not least because he had promoted Kornilov to command the army. His credibility collapsed. When the Bolshevik revolution came two months later, no one wanted to defend Kerensky. On a visit to London in 1970, shortly before his death aged 89. Kerensky signed himself in a hotel register as "Prime Minister of Russia". To the end, Kerensky believed in his own destiny as the last legitimate leader of the shortlived Russian Republic. It seems as if Gorbachev, the last leader of the Soviet Union, may share Kerensky's melancholy fate.

The author is a fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. His book A People's Tragedy: The Russian Revolution (Cape) has just won the NCR Book Award, the Wolfson History Prize, the W.H. Smith Literary Award and the Longman/History Today Award.

Scots would be proud to fund a new parliament building in Edinburgh, says Magnus Linklater.

t was, in its way, a small moment of history — the unveiling to the Scottish people by a Scottish Secretary of the questions to be posed in a referen-dum which would establish the legitimacy of a Scottish Parliament. "I agree that there should be a Scottish Parliament." Or alternatively, "I do not agree that there should be a Scottish Parliament." Simple really. One wondered why it had taken 390 years to dream them up. True, Mr Secretary Dewar sounded more like a family solicitor announcing an unexpected bequest than the herald of a new era, but there we were - the process had begun. Back in Edinburgh I strolled past the building where, Donald Dewar had assured us, the parliament would sit "before the millennium". The Royal High School certainly looks the part. Built about 170 years ago by Thomas Hamilton in the Athenian style, it is a copy of the Temple of Theseus, all pediments and pillars, standing four square on a curve of the Calton Hill, looking out over Holyrood and the Canongate. Good views, however, do not a parliament make. The more I thought about it, the more I realised that this building just would not do. Sooner or later it would have to be replaced. For a start, Theseus could hardly be a less suitable role model - he was, after all, a unionist rather than a devolver, the architect of the political reform that welded the commuScotland deserves a bonnier House

nities of Attica into one state. More important, the place is too small, too cramped, too confrontational for the new model parliament that is being planned. Its debating chamber is a cockpit of a place, its narrow floor surrounded by raked seats which rear above it. It seems designed as a forum for altercation and hostility rather than civilised discussion. It is less open than even the House of Commons — yet it is precisely the yah-boo atmosphere of the Commons that everyone is attempting to avoid. The galleries that surround it provide inadequate room for the press and the public. There would be limited office space for members and although there is, surprisingly, a tunnel linking it to the old Scottish Office building across the road, the idea of members having to scurry along this in answer to the division bells is absurd.

The fact is that the High School was purpose-built for the 19th century rather than the 21st. However imaginatively adapted, it would still end up as a spatchcock better. Edinburgh has a great tradition of fine public buildings erected by philanthropists down the ages to house its schoolchildren, its lawyers, its doctors and, yes, its parliamentarians. At the same time, Scotland has a long and distinguished history of architec-tural achievement — from the Adam brothers through Charles Rennie Mackintosh and Alexander "Greek" Thomson to Robert Lorimer and Basil Spence. The time has come to revive that tradition and draw on that history.

he best idea would be an international architectural competition to design a parliament for the new millennium. It should encourage the most visionary of buildings, one that would do for Edinburgh what the opera house did for Sydney, or the Beaubourg for Paris. It could, if the citizens of Edinburgh were able to overcome their notorious conservatism, be built on the north side of the Calton Hill, where plans for a since I can remember. Alternatively it could be constructed in Leith. where the old docks have given way to a new town and where, recently, the brand new Scottish Office opened for business.

I hope such a competition could be won by a Scottish architect, but I am not chauvinistic about it. The Scandinavian architects who have set new standards for creative design would instinctively recog-nise the Scottish challenge. I would be delighted for a Dutch or German architect to win - in both countries the symbolic importance of grand new public buildings has been recognised. I have nothing against Messrs Richard Rogers and Norman Foster, who seem to be ubiquitous on these occasions. but I would hope that something different came along. The last major competition in Scotland for the new National Museum in Edinburgh — produced 370 entries from all over the world, and was won by a Scot. So anything is

To all of which the deadening response is likely to be: aye, but who pays? One answer is that the money could simply come out of the block grant from Westminster. On Thursday Mr Dewar revealed that the £5 million which the referendum will cost would come out of that grant, adding that this was hardly excessive given a Soutish Office budget of £16 billion. So £100 million more or so would be little million more or so would be little more than a dent. But that would spoil the whole point of the exercise, The proper solution is for the money to be raised in Scotland by Scots. What could be more symbolic of the enterprise and self-sufficiency which this new parliament is meant to embody than a great new building paid for by the country it represents? In the old days, great monu-ments were erected by public subscription. The modern equivalent is the lottery. A combination of lottery funds contributed in Scotland, a Scottish Office allocation and, finally, a fixed share of that famous tartan tax would give every Scot a sense that they had made a scot a sense that they had made a personal contribution. It would be a parliament for the people, paid for by the people. And the result would be something in which all of them could take legitimate pride.

A Wapping for the Garden

very word written this week about Covent Garden opera was nonsense. why the public will subsidise grand opera. One is to afford an exquisite experience to those who love opera and can get a ticket. Lucky them. compensating thrill. At present that thrill is a feast of glamour, malice, anger, envy, anguish and extrava-gance, laid out for their delectation at regular intervals.

Covent Garden has recently passed both tests with flying colours. Its operatic output is as good as ever. The recent Mastersingers was top-flight. Reviews of Elektra last week indicated a triumph. If anarchy has indeed a role in art, the more of it the better. As for indulging the public's Schaden-freude, the week has been incomparable. Covent Garden's "second chorus" of critics and quote-makers have surpassed themselves.

I have lost count of the malaises, demoralisations, panic-strickens, misery crescendos and "all-timelows" of the opera press. The new Royal Opera chairman, Lord Chadlington, is variously a Machiavellian Graderind and Wodehousian silly ass" (The Times). His board are "a bunch of amateurs" (The Independent) and the management "a juggling of fruit and veg" (The Daily Tele-graph). To The Guardian, Covent Garden was nothing less than "a story about British society, with

All this is because a new chief executive at the Opera House, Genista McIntosh, has not worked out after four months in the job. These things happen. In other businesses, executives come and 90 without such fuss. But here was a resignation with added Pavarotti indeed with added Bernard Haitink and Darcy Bussell, not to mention an earl, a baron, a rich heiress, Otello, daggers, coups, masked balls and the Mastersingers of Nuremberg.

So there is no point in pretending. Part at least of the pleasure that the wider public derives from an institution such as Covent Garden is in opera as soap. Like the Royal Family and the Conservative Party, the story is dull when things go well but glorious when they are going wrong. Last year's documentary The House was an enthralling tale of artistic folk living through hell. The opera house is a stick of national furniture which we love to kick. Opera may be Carlyle's "speech of angels", but its reporting is a dirge of the damned.

What is it the critics want? I have read the answer a dozen times this week. They want a Royal Opera House that is managed by true opera-lovers and not "money men". They want a state-of-the-art house full of gizmos. They want job-security for a unionised workforce that is shockingly demoralised and exploited. They want "affordable" ticket prices and a subsidy that is "enough" yet not politically embarrassing. They want the world's best singers and conductors doing modern not "canary" operas. They want the best. They want to be free of the dead hand of sponsorship.

Why, ask the critics, don't the idiots who sit on the Covent Garden and Arts Council boards just do it? Stop fruiting around with grocers, bureaucrats and consultants and "give the artists the resources they need". The great and good in the royal box should stop meddling in art. They should hand over the money, all of it, or stand condemned as philistines.

The great and good have been doing this for decades. Sheer exhaustion has set in. When, some eight years ago, Lord Sainsbury and Vivien Duffield offered to match public money for a new Covent Garden building, push came to shove. Delay followed on delay. Costs continued to rise and met an ever-stickier Treasury response. Something had to give. The prospect of temporary closure inevitably led to some thinking the unthinkable.

My own industry has been through this pain. I was not party to the Wapping adventure, but there was the same wide agreement that management must seize the right to manage and unions must submit to cost-cutting. The trouble was always, "No pain please, we're liberals". It was a case of "those behind cried Forward/ And those before cried Back". In the past, the unions had always won. At Wapping they lost.

Many journalists will still not admit that the battle transformed an industry and enabled Britain to keep the range of titles it has today. At the time, observers prayed silently for the battle to succeed, yet they prayed loudly for Rupert Murdoch to come a cropper.

Covert Garden has surely reached the gates of Wapping. Kate Mosse's 1995 book on The House listed 100 Musicians Union members, 150 Equity members, 300 Bectu members, three-day weeks, 90 per cent of productions on overtime and staff with second jobs as taxi drivers, fish-and-chip shop owners, even pilots. The film showed a timekeeper clocking 15 hours of overtime to someone who never showed up, joking "they're all comedians here". The Covent Garden chorus is so overstaffed, it seems constantly in danger of falling into the orchestra off. The pressure on the managers was and clearly still is appalling. Today the unions are again threatening a strike over touring.

An opera house is a temple of the muses, but it is also a factory. There is no easy way to reform a factory that has grown helplessly self-indulgent. It has to shut down and start again, or at least regard a shutdown threat as plausible. The opera house is shutting down. The

Covent Garden is a nationalised industry in receipt of deficit finance of some £15 million a year. It has been nationalised since the Treasury, the Arts Council and the Opera House started to exchange personnel in the 1960s. Lord Armstrong was made secretary to the Covent Garden board in 1968 while in charge of public spending at the Treasury. The recent arrival of Lord Chadlington and Mary Allen direct from the Arts Council may seem suspiciously abrupt, but it recognises a longstanding co-

The trouble with this sort of hands-on, hands-off accountability has been that bucks can be passed up and down the line at each stage in the budgetary cycle. Last week the Arts Council chairman. Lord Cowrie, felt obliged to tell the opera board that its plans were "a shambles", the sort of genteel rebuke that his predecessors normally offered discreetly over hunch. The former opera chairman (and former Arts Council deputy-director) Sir Angus Stirling duly re-minded Lord Gowrie that, no, his Arts Council was more to blame. It was like 1970s Fleet Street proprietors blaming each other for being soft on the unions.

ow the taxpayers have a chance to find out what they get when producers cannot spend at will. when they cannot equate high spending with high art and allow unions to walk off with the cash. Taxpayers are entitled to know what "real-cost" opera would be like, even if they then decide that they prefer it done the old way. They might also have a view on whether a better way of expanding the audience for opera is not to lop £10 off an exorbitant seat price but to broadcast each production to the world, and put it on video. Ms McIntosh's desire to have more "cheap" £50 seats as a liberal gesture is a measure of the fantasy in which opers management now

The Chadlington-Allen duo: promises to be what grand opera deserves — needs — but will never admit it needs. When the surgery is over, opera will not applaud but silently approve. That is the British way with tough managers. There is no point in the Royal Opera House demanding even more money with artistic menaces. The outcome after reopening may be blood in Bow Street. For a while it may be a scratch orchestra in the pit and blacklegs on stage. The soft-hearted will retreat to the crush bar in silence. The test will lie with the audience. Do they love opera enough to hear it through a pickets'

WOMEN'S leggings have been banned from the Royal Windsor Horse Show this year for the first time. The ruling is part of the first written dress code imposed for the members' enclosure at the show, which has recently been revamped. Men must wear jackets suits are recommended. No polo necks or polo shirts will be accept-ed. For women, skirts and smart trousers are allowed but leggings are forbidden.

Jodhpurs but no leggings

In previous years, visitors to the enclosure, which the Queen visited yesterday, have always been expected to dress properly without being told, but increasing abuse of this adult approach has led to the need for a written code

"We have inflicted a rigid dress code on our members," said an organiser for the show, "because we honestly think they should dress to a higher standard. In fact, yesterday we had to turn a couple away who were wearing jeans. Why should they walk around looking like that when others have dressed up for the occasion?

Leggings are a tricky one. Though comfortable, my style editor tells me that they can be a risky option for the less-than-perfect

PARENTS of children at Sidwell Friends, Chelsea Clinton's school in Washington DC, have been asked to donate items for an auction. Last year the highest bidder won the chance to play a round of golf with the President. This year, Mr Clinton has only given a signed copy of his book. Between Hope and History.

One lot, however, is not expected to set the chequebooks fluttering: a private screening of the film Witness, followed by an Amish dinner for 12, at which the Sidwell parents, specialists in the "psychoanalysis of film", will dissect the film's real meaning.

ccasionally, like a beachcomber uncovering a semi-precious stone in unpromising shingle, those of us who trawl the scholastic journals for excitement come up with a real gem concealed under a title that is as enticing as a stale bun. This week was such a moment. I have been riveted, enthralled, consumed to the exclusion of all other matters, by the marvellous Textual Monopolies: Literary

Copyright and the Public Domain. Readers, put down that Jilly Cooper bonkbuster! If you want to glimpse human nature, red in tooth, claw and legal fees, then Textual Monopolies: Literary Copyright and the Public Domain is required reading
Out this month, it's a collection of papers (edited by Patrick Parrinder and Warren Chernaik: published by King's College London) which examines one of the strangest pieces of European Union cultural meddling in recent years. In July 1995, the EU ruled that copyright should be Touched by lunacy beyond the grave harmonised throughout its dominions. And, if the word harmonised" suggests a process of sweetness and concord, think again. This was a murky episode, with consequences that have affected anybody interested in books, films, plays, music and the visual arts.

As Parrinder points out, the legislation was "shaped by commercial horse-trading and political compromise, and dressed up with a rationale that is almost entirely bogus". It was rushed through Parliament without debate in a single day, and passed into law with virtually no public discussion. In a sense, then, these corruscating essays are two years too late. Never mind; at least we can moan retrospectively.

What happened in 1995? Well, Britain, like most other parts of the world, had a copyright law extending the rights of authors and their heirs for 50 years after the author's death. Germany, however - on the disingenuous pretext that its authors lost valuable royalties during the war - allowed 70 years of posthumous copyright. So when it came to harmonisation, guess who prevailed? Quite so. The EU decided that the Germans were right, and that Britain, 12 other EU countries, America, Australia and Canada were wrong.

The consequences have been enormous. Authors, artists and composers who were in the public domain were suddenly back in copyright. Among them were Kipling, Elgar, Hardy, Holst, Barrie, Lorca, Delius, Lawrence, Monet, Conan Doyle and Yeats. This was good news for a whole witches brew of vested interests, who had lobbied for years to bring it about: publishers, grasping heirs, bossy estates, avaricious royalty agen cies. But it was bad news for the public. For, when the copyright apses on a work of art, public access is almost always improved. To give just one example, think of maverick Wordsworth Classics in the early 1990s, with their cheap and cheerful reprints of out-of-copyright novels.

So why did the EU do it? It seems that the Eurocrats were dazzled by a single argument: that copyright is "fundamental to intel-lectual creation", and therefore should be massively protected for the good of us all. Well, nobody wants to rob creative talents of their living, and I suppose you could just about extend that princi-ple to their kiddies. But 70 years of posthumous protection takes us well beyond that. It is a licence for suppression of our cultural heri-

That wouldn't matter so much if estates and publishers were generally obliging. But in recent years we have seen dozens of estates exercising proprietorial rights in phers who take even a moderately critical stance are prevented from quoting their subject's work. Theatre directors have been prevented from staging plays because some estate didn't like their style. Re-cently we even had the Balanchine Trust interfering with the Royal Ballet's casting of a Balanchine hat's more, the concept of "fair dealing" fby which scholars and critics can quote a limited amount of text without infringing copyright) has been eroded to such an extent that some powerful copyright holders barely acknowledge it Indeed, publishers are now developing something called an "Electronic Copyright Management System". an Orwellian "total surveillance system" for the information superhighway which will police their interests and crack down on even the most innocent trespasser. I find that rather creepy.

There would be less agitation about the 70-year rule if more heirs, publishers and royalty agencies gave the impression that they cared about promoting the great works assigned to them, rather than regarding them simply as commercial assets on which income must be maximised.

But there is an even more important point. As more of the public's money is channelled into royalties for second-generation heirs, so less is available to support the living artist. The EU is actually stifling, not supporting, intellectual creation. It's too late to do anything about it now, of course. But for anybody who wants a brilliant analysis of how inexorably the EU works against the consumer's interests, I commend Textual Monopolies: Literary Copyright and the Public Domain. But, Jan Brown's revival left me wondering if those strengths were not also liabilities. After all, London has become a harder, more brutal place since 1981. when the play first appeared, and there were moments when I felt i was watching a mildly feminist Passport to Pimlico - and that particular black-and-white tribute to Cockney togetherness is a lot more than 15 years old.

The trouble is that Dunn's characterisation does not go a lot deeper than the skin on display. Steaming, her first play, suffers from a tendency to italicise indicators of per sonality, relationship and class: Dawn's Mum (Sheila Reid keeps exposing her own mistrust of sex with remarks like (of Dawn's Dad) "he never interfered with me after she was bosn. Jose scarcely stops parading her enthusiasm for the male member. Know th obsession, know the psyche. As a result Dunn's didacti-cism is less effective than it might be. She wants us toadmire the camaraderie that emerges among these very different women as they amble about in their towels. She wants us to feel that a good cause helps them to discover themselves and grow. Nancy decides there may be life and even love after William. Josie becomes an articulate spokes-

Dawn strips off and cavorts happily about, a great she-elephant who senses she can escape her trainer. But some of the behaviour is not altogether believable. Moreover, the ending is too abrupt and Dunn's belief that a London council has a responsibility to provide a nice, safe alternative for 9,000 bathless houses seems touchingly dated. But the piece is amusing enough. Wallace may not be as funny as Brenda Blethyn, who relied less on bulk, bicep and fat-lady fun when she created the role of Dawn, and Edair may not eradicate memories of a sharp, streetwise Georgina Hale; but they keep the evening moving tent, but they never lose interest in their grub, says Vi, summing up the overall drift. What makes the play attractive, at least to me, is that it sents us with women who can express their indignation at men, yet admit their need for them. I would not wish it shriller or more ideological. All the same, something is missing. Abrasiveness? Toughmindedness? If Dunn had aimed to make the piece speak to the 1990s, she would have been more generous with aggressively shouting at such unsentimental strengths.

BLAIR'S BRAVE START

Labour is right talks cannot wait for terrorists

The Northern Ireland peace process was both John Major's unfinished business and, even though it was partial, a genuine achievement, unambiguously his own. His skills and commitment secured one ceasefire and created room for hope. They also created doubts that his successor could achieve as much. There is a long way to go before Tony Blair can match Mr Major's success, let alone surpass him and bring lasting peace to Ulster. But the Prime Minister's speech yesterday was an impressive first step.

Mr Blair's rhetoric should provide a nervous Unionist majority with the reassurance it seeks. Arguing that "none of us in this hall today, even the youngest, is likely to see Northern Ireland as anything but a part of the United Kingdom", Mr Blair was almost echoing the words of the former Unionist leader James Molyneaux. After so many changes in the past three years, Labour, like the weather, has almost lost the capacity to surprise. There has, however, been a genuine thaw towards the Unionists.

It is striking that less than three years ago the declared ambition of the then Northern Ireland spokesman, Kevin McNamara, was to be the last Secretary of State for the province. By making clear that he is personally committed to the Union and has no plans to put Ulster on the slippery slope to a sell-out, Mr Blair can, with greater authority, persuade the Unionists that change is the price of making the current constitutional realities more acceptable to nationalists.

Unionists have been suspicious of some of the changes proposed by London and Dublin in their Framework Documents, not least dynamic cross-border bodies, because they regard them as engines for Irish imity. If however, changes are designed in a spirit of underpinning, not undermining the Union. then Unionists should show generosity.

Cynical, or churlish, Unionists such as Ian Paisley who are disposed to wonder if a Labour Prime Minister can really be sincere in his support should take comfort from Martin McGumness's sour reaction to Mr Blair's speech. Sinn Fein was understandably disappointed by the Prime Minister's pledge that he would not be a persuader for Irish unity. But republicans should not merely snipe from the sidelines. Mr Blair is giving them the chance to move out of the darkness and into the political daylight. They should take it, for the sake of their voters and all Ireland's people.

By authorising contact between government officials and Sinn Fein Mr Blair is showing a genuine willingness to give republicans the benefit of what little doubt there is. Republicanism has often elevated violent means above political ends; even when pursuing its political goals, violence has been central to its strategy. It is hard to see republicans permanently forswearing violence now; yet they must do so if Sinn Fein wants to enter talks. There can be no weakening. The requirement that they abandon the armalite is not a quibble cooked up by opponents who need an excuse to keep republicans out of talks. It is a point of principle on which democrats must unite if democracy is not to be fatally compromised. In sticking to that principle, but trying everything within his power to promote a ceaselire. Mr Blair is both defending democracy and affirming his sincere desire for Sinn Fein to be included in any settlement. Republicans should grasp the olive branch or face the consequences.

Mr Blair has said that if Sinn Fein do not join talks now, "the settlement train is leaving" and he will reach a deal without them. His desire to broker an agreement without the republicans if they continue their terror campaign is politically brave and morally right. It depends, however, on those other parties, particularly the SDLP and the Dublin Government, sharing that view. The people of England learnt during the election campaign that republicans are more than capable of stopping some trains. Ireland's nationalists should make it clear . they will not allow democracy to be derailed.

LABOUR UNDERGROUND

Three ways to breathe life into the Tube

There are few campaign promises harder for the Government to translate into action than its pledge to improve public transport. City centres are being suffocated by traffic yet neither Government nor local authorities has the money for the integrated schemes. that planners recommend. Nowhere is the system should be subdivided and sold off are need for action more pressing or the sums more daunting than in London. The Underground, the network that keeps the capital moving, is still reeling from the cuts of the last Conservative budget; and with a capital shortfall of some £700 million almost all the schemes to improve the outdated system and make it self-financing are to be axed. John Prescott, the transport and environment supremo, who called his transport ministers to Chevering for a brainstorming session yesterday, will have to move fast.

The last Government believed there were few votes to be won in transport and even fewer in London. Kenneth Clarke's prejudice was challenged by the City, tourist authorities and all those who were concerned with London's global competitiveness. On a typical weekday some 23 million journeys are made on the Tube. The system carries significantly more passengers than the entire national railway network.

After years of relative neglect, what the system needs is investment, on a massive scale. Labour has three choices. There is the left-wing solution of pouring in-some £400. million a year for five years, by the end of which the Underground - which already makes an operating profit - would be able redeem its campaign promise.

to pay for ongoing repairs. The problem is the Treasury limit on borrowing. The rightwing solution is privatisation, a last-minute promise by the Conservatives which proved unpopular with Londoners. This could bring in capital, but the complexities of how the enormous. Labour left itself a loophole by opposing "wholesale privatisation"; it could, perhaps, counterance contracting out the system while retaining London Transport as a regulatory body. Thirdly, there is the middle option of using the private finance initiative. This is the least satisfactory: courting private interest, scheme by scheme. makes long-term planning almost impossible, and amounts simply to running the Underground on hire purchase, with the bills still coming in at the end.

Glenda Jackson, who has immediate responsibility for Britain's railways, could look further, however. How about a London levy to pay for transport infrastructure? Or a tax on cars coming into the centre that is earmarked for public transport? The Treasury hates hypothecated taxes; but Labour has promised to think the unthinkable. Most capital cities take public transport, generally heavily subsidised, almost as an urban right. The efficiently managed Underground, by contrast, charges market rates. The public is prepared to pay; it was on the road to recovery before Mr Clarke's axe. Labour owes it not only to London but to Britain's prosperity to secure the system and

Germany sets new standards in creative accounting

For a year and more Theo Waigel, the German Finance Minister, has soothed German doubts about monetary union by insisting that, in order to qualify, governments must fulfil the Maastricht criteria to the last decimal point. EMU would not threaten German fiscal rigour, because Europe would be obliged to adopt German practice.

Now Herr Waigel has set an example of "German practice" that far surpasses in ingenuity anything that Italian, Belgian or French bureaucrats have come up with. He has taken the Wagner script and improved on it. Alberich stole the gold from the Rhinemaidens; but Herr Waigel claims that it is possible to raid the Bundesbank's gold reserves and pocket the profit, without touching a single ounce of the precious stuff.

It is all so simple. By law, the Bundesbank gold is valued at its purchase price, a modest 13.69 billion marks. If revalued at its market price, it would be worth 42.17 billion marks more - which coincidentally happens to be. the size of this year's hole in Germany's accounts. This abruptly much more valuable hoard will of course stay in the vaults; Herr Waigel would never dream of selling off the family treasure. The happy man has discovered that he does not need to; he can simply transfer the Bundesbank's resulting windfall to the 'redemption fund for historic burdens", thus reducing Germany's public debt and deficit at a stroke without actually paying any debt off. Add in some accelerated sales of government shares in Deutsche Telekom and bingo! Germany will meet the 1997 Maastricht targets which it would otherwise miss. In the marketplace, this trick is not new. Companies used to revalue land and other assets and call it profit until the Accounting Standards Board spoilt the game.

Now that Germany has revealed the secret of modern alchemy, turning gold into paper wealth, other European governments may be tempted to follow suit. Purists might not accept a Greek claim that the market value of the Parthenon had been applied to the national accounts, and Herr Waigel's thick eyebrows, ever vigilant when it comes to the mote in Italian eyes, would be quick to furrow at a "revaluation" of the Colosseum. But he could hardly object if Gordon Brown were to transfer the market value of Ministry of Defence land to the Treasury books, since that is potentially saleable. There are just three snags. The first is one of timing; the Bundesbank law must first be changed and there are doubts about whether this magic carpet will be ready in time to swell the 1997 accounts. The second is that no amount of fiscal fudging will after Germany's underlying problems. The third is political. It does not take genius to understand the rule that debt does not shrink without being repaid. Herr Waigel may have his way, monetary union may start on time. But it will start on a fraudulent foundation. German voters used to believe that creative accounting stopped at the German frontier. The Rhinemaidens have yet to be heard, and their verdict is likely to be severe. The "transfer" of the Rhinegold laid the fateful trail to Götterdämmerung.

United Tory front

on windfall tax

Sir, The windfall tax (reports, May 16) is the corner-stone of the Government's welfare-to-work plans. No Conservative believes that getting more of our people back to work is not the proposed method is fraught with danger.

It is simply folly to believe that the tax will be paid by "fat cat" directors, or that there are huge sums of "excess" profits" locked away in bank vaults. ripe for the plundering of the Labour Government. The truth is that the burden of the tax will fall on ordinary customers, shareholders and employ-

Even a look at just one aspect of the windfall tax - its impact on pension funds - shows how hard-working people will be hit. Pension funds are amongst the biggest shareholders in the utilities. The windfall tax will wipe millions of pounds off share values. So pensions will be lower. Even if the tax is already factored into some share prices, this simply means that the damage has already been done.

No one disputes the good intentions behind Labour's proposed welfare-towork scheme. But subsidised jobcreation is not nearly as effective as real growth in the economy. It is no justification for damaging hard-working people's pensions, putting up bills, hitting vital investment programmes and threatening jobs.

Labour's claim that their plan is legally watertight looks more questionable by the day. A legal opinion obtained by Aims of Industry in January stated that there is "a powerful cocktail of possible grounds for legal challenge". The result could be "consi-derable delay", and Labour would have to raise other taxes to fund their

Labour's big idea is coming unstuck as we write. If it succeeds, it will hit ordinary people hard. Conservatives

Legal challenge From Mr Malcolm Hill

Sir, The news ("Windfall tax faces legal challenge". May 16) that two companies likely to be targeted by the Chancellor are seeking legal advice is to be expected by commercial direc-tors, who desire to operate within the

The Government has led the electorate to believe that the windfall tax will fall on the victims only and provide funds to relieve unemployment. Indeed they have been encouraged to admire the brilliant imposition, whereby thousands of young people can be put back to work at the expense of a few "fat cats". But the two claims are untrue. The windfall tax will be recovered within a year or two by the victims increasing their prices; the real payers will be the users of fixed and mobile telephones, gas, water, electricity and aircraft, and also of goods and services whose producers use the same services.

Government has never relieved unemployment by imposing taxes on the people. It may claim a particular scheme has created employment but when such claims are balanced against the unemployment caused by the taxation there is no gain.

Yours faithfully MALCOLM HILL 58a Abingdon Road, W& May 16.

From Mr Richard A. Edwards

Sir, I was somewhat puzzled to read that most City lawyers were of the opinion that a windfall tax could not be contested in the courts on the grounds that an Act of Parliament is beyond challenge in our courts. As Mr Justice Hoffman has observed, the EC treaty is in effect a constitution (Stokeon-Trent City Council v B&Q [1991]).

No domestic law, including an Act of Parliament, which conflicts with EU law is valid. EU law is supreme, unlike our Parliament. Thus if the targets of the windfall tax can argue that it violates EU law they might either challenge it on those grounds in our courts or apply to have the matter referred to the European

Court of Justice. In either case they should, of course, apply for an interim injunction preventing the Crown enforcing the Act until the question of its legality is determined. All of this has been long settled ever since the judgment of the House of Lords in ex-parte Factortame (No Z) [1990].

Yours etc. RICHARD A. EDWARDS, 60 Queen's Road. Devizes, Wiltshire, May 16.

From Dr D. W. Phillipson, President of the British Institute in Eastern Africa

Sir, As director of the current archaeological excavations at Aksum, Ethiopia, I trust that I may correct certain inaccuracies in Michael Binyon's re-port of May 9, "Yemen tests wisdom Solomon with claim to Queen of

It has long been believed, and the recent excavations by the British Institute in Eastern Africa have confirmed, that occupation of the Aksum site itself extends no further back than the early 1st century AD, although older settlement is attested in the immediate vicinity. Legends about the Queen of Sheba recall her as a contemporary of Solomon around the 10th century BC. There is no evidence for developed civilisation at Aksum at such an early

You report that archaeologists at Aksum have found coins, etc. dating from the time of the Queen of Sheba This is not only untrue, it is impossible. Aksumite coinage did not begin until about AD 270. Coinage was not used anywhere in the 10th century BC. Neither my excavations nor those directed in collaboration by colleagues from Italy and the United States have revealed materials contemporary with the Queen of Sheba. Legends linking both Yemen and Ethiopia with the Queen of Sheba may be explained by reference to the very close cultural links between the two areas which prevailed for more than one thousand years before the rise of Islam.

Yours truly, DAVID W. PHILLIPSON.

British Institute in Eastern Africa, Gonville & Caius College, Cambridge.

From Mr Nigel Groom

Sir, The Oueen of Sheba will of course continue to beguile tourists with her mystery. Her connection with either Ethiopia or South Arabia (ancient Saba or Sheba) are questionable, how-

The latest chronological researches now date the first known king of Saba to around 800 BC, well after the time of Solomon (c950 BC), and there is no evidence of trading between south and north Arabia before the 8th century BC. The Israelites did not begin to use south Arabian aromatics (frankincense and myrrh) in their rituals until the 7th century BC.

Moreover, Sabaean rulers were invariably male. But genealogical tables in the Old Testament testify to more than one Sheba, while there are

Red Cross in Zaire

From the Director General of the British Red Cross Society

Sir, On May 8, World Red Cross day, 171 Red Cross national societies around the world celebrated the humanitarian achievements of the International Red Cross movement.

Tragically, that day also brought the news that ten of our colleagues from the Zairean Red Cross had been killed the day before whilst selflessly working to help victims of the war in

The tragedy occurred when the ten first-aid workers were assisting people wounded in the fighting be tween government and rebel forces which had been raging in the town of Kenge, 200km east of the capital, Kinshasa. During the fighting some 200 civilians were reportedly killed and over 120 were admitted to hospital. Despite the severity of the fighting Zairean Red Cross first-aiders were prepared to risk their lives in order to evacuate and treat the wounded.

Since last October, when the war began in eastern Zaire, the Zairean only organisation able to deliver urgently needed assistance to Rwandan refugees and Zaireans fleeing the civil war. Often, when expatriates were forced to evacuate areas on security grounds, local volunteers worked tirelessly to ensure that assistance continued to reach the beneficiaries. This is a good example of local people caring for each other.

sents for those working under it.

Lottery and the arts

From the Executive Director of the Lottery Promotion Company Limited Sir, Melvyn Bragg's assertion (Arts. May 12) that Hollywood's "intensive development and cultivation of film and television has made it the second biggest industry in the USA" is wrong, according to a survey published in February by the Georgia Institute of Technology.

In a list of the 25 largest industries in the US real estate came first; second, retail trade; sport, with a turnover of $152 billion, was eleventh.

The report states: "By comparison, the sport figure (just over 2 per cent of GDP) is larger than either the computer hardware or legal services industries and larger than the combined size of the motion-picture, radio/ television, and educational services

Nonetheless we heartily endorse Mr Bragg's plea for more money to the arts. If the lottery invests most of its money in arts and sports, that will bring greater social returns to the public, and financial returns to HM Treasury. By investing more in sports and recreation, we make huge savings on crime and ill-health. By investing more in the arts at grassroots level we introduce to the many the "quality of life" for which the lottery was started.

Yours. DENIS VAUGHAN. Executive Director. The Lottery Promotion Company Limited. 41 Floral Street, WC2. May 13.

From Professor Edward Ullendorff,

Sir. With all due respect to Michael Binyon, Emperor Haile Selassie was not the "Lion of Judah" (the quotation is taken from Revelation v, 5): the New Testament reference was merely the motto of the Ethiopian Crown in general. The late Emperor certainly did not "insist" that the Queen of Sheba (Ethiopian Makeda) married King Solomon: he knew that the Ethiopian national saga - Kebra Nagasi (Glory of the Kings) - referred to intimate relations between them which resulted in a son, Menelik, the putative founder of the Ethiopian dynasty.

Arabic and other versions of the story of the Queen of Sheba are essentially based on the Hebrew Targum Sheni to the Book of Esther and, of course, ultimately on the texts of ! Kings x and II Chronicles ix.

I was glad to see Michael Binyon referring to my late colleagues Bob Serjeant and especially Freddie Beeston, who certainly were prominent exponents of south Arabian epigraphy; but they did not express views on the historicity or otherwise of the Queen of Sheba.

There is no need to go for illumination as far as Chartres. A beautiful window in King's College Chapel. Cambridge, depicts the visit of the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon: the King is seated on his throne and between him and the Queen is an area of blue glass representing the pool of the Muslim legend.

I am, Sir, yours truly. EDWARD ULLENDORFF. 4 Bladon Close, Oxford. May 9.

Select committees

From the Director of Charter 88

Sir, Your leader ("The select few", May 14) will be welcomed by those of us who have drawn attention over the years to the important role of select committees within Parliament. They should provide an alternative career structure for backbench MPs - and every one of these MPs should be provided with a place on such a com-

But one further step could be taken to make the committee structure at Westminster work more effectively. The special standing committee procedure - recommended by Parliament itself 20 years ago - could be used to give all Bills proper scrutiny. This committee stage would allow MPs to question both ministers and civil servants as to the purpose of the Bill, to take evidence from interested groups affected by the legislation, and to highlight problems with draft legislation at an early stage when they might more easily be remedied. This procedure already exists within Parliament's standing orders. and the Government can refer any Bill to such a committee. Perhaps the time has come for a reform-minded Government to resurrect the Special Standing Committee to ensure proper legislative scrutiny - particularly in the face of such a large parliamentary majority.

Yours faithfully, ANDREW PUDDEPHATT. Director, Charter 88, Exmouth House, 3-11 Pine Street, EC1.

Dearth of British music at Proms

From Dr David Green

Sir. Notwithstanding the "20 superlatives" identified by Richard Morrison in the 1997 BBC Proms season (Arts, May 8), the steady decline in the representation of British music at these concerts continues unabated.

I calculate that the time allotted to British composers this year is the lowest since you published an article by Simon Heffer deploring the situation, "Forward with Britten", on August 10, 1985. Since then you have published two letters from me making the same point (August 17, 1985, and September to, 1995).

Not a single note of either Holst or Delius has been played for the last three years, and this year there is no Walton; audiences are still denied such standard repertoire works as The Planets or Brigg Fair.

The Gramophone, in its standard repertoire recommended recordings, lists the 2nd symphonies of both Sibelius and Vaughan Williams; yet the Sibelius has been performed [] times in the last 18 years and the Vaughan Williams only twice. Something must be done urgently to redress this imbalance. Once again, the decision of the BBC's Controller of Music, who has autonomy in devising the Proms, should be seriously ques-

From Mr Peter L. G. Bateman

Sir. The suggestion that a phosphorus-loaded, self-igniting rat destroyed a thatched cottage (letters, May 9) ignores the fact that phosphorusbased rat poisons have been banned for the past 36 years under The Animals (Cruel Poisons) Act 1962.

Today we have to kill rats with kindness, avoiding any apparent symptoms of suffering and preferably ensuring that they all die in good health, following additional legisla-tion (Control of Pesticides Regulations

Incidentally, the insurance industry has estimated that 20 per cent of fires "of unknown origin" are caused by rodents gnawing electricity cables.

ROB PALMER

Rob Palmer, underwater explorer, died in a diving accident in the Red Sea off Giftun Island. near Hurghada, Egypt, on May 5 aged 45. He was born on October 18, 1951.

ob Palmer was a pioneer of deep, long-duration cave diving in Britain, Ireland, and, most especially; in the tropi-cal sea caves of the Bahamas. His explorations in the Blue Holes of Grand Bahama and Andros Island have featured in a number of television. films, and in his own books The Blue Holes of the Bahamas (1985) and Deep into the Blue Holes (1989).
From a boyhood in Scotland and a keenness on mountain climbing, the young Palmer, on moving to Lancaster, took up first potholing and then, in 1975, cave diving. He quickly joined the elite group pushing forward the frontiers of the sport. With Geoff Yeadon in 1976 he successfully negotiated a 200-foot sump in the Ingleborough cave system to discover a large dry cavern, Radagast's Revenge, from where eventually would be found a link to the farreaches of the Gaping Gill system.

With Martyn Fair lie explored the remote caves of Agen Aliwedd and, in Ireland, Roaring Well, one of that country's longest flooded cave systems. During the 1980s, by which time he had moved to Bristol, Palmer was active in new developments in the Wookey Hole complex deep under the Mendip Hills. His partnership with Farr culminated in a record push beyond Sump 26 in Wookey in 1982.

Four years later, turning his attention to the Cheddar end of the syste with Richard Stevenson and Robert Harper, he extended exploration through a series of sumps and chambers beyond Gough's showcaves. This work continued during 1988 in the hope of finding another dry chamber, the legendary "lost cave" of Cheddar. However, a sequence of ever-longer solo dives by Palmer, beyond the third sump, revealed no such cavern nor a breakthrough to the known Wookey system. Another attempt in 1990 was stopped at a record distance of 1,300 feet into Sump 3 by a massive boulder

Throughout this period, Palmer was the leading figure in a new phase of exploration into the Blue Holes. These mysterious features, which punctuate the shallow sea floor just offshore of . Eastern Grand Bahama and around about decompression routines.

Andros Island, are the openings to a deep and beautiful flooded cave systern. Whereas British caves tend to be cold, often constricted, and filled with murky, near lifeless water, here are to be found open passages, warm, clear water and bountiful marine life.

Pioneer exploration, notably by George Benjamin and his associates between the late 1950s and the mid-1970s, had been kept in check by the sheer depth and the limitations of diving with compressed air. Experimentation with alternative breathing mixtures, which had begun in the 1930s but been dropped after a number of fatalities, was only now being seriously re-adopted by a handful of extreme cave divers, as more became known

Palmer was in the forefront of this fast-changing science, which enabled him to take up the challenge of the Blue Holes. On his reconnaissance expedition with Farr in 1981, he discovered what was then the world's longest submarine cave beneath Conch Sound but was given a sharp reminder of the results of error in these dangerous waters when, in another cave, he found the tattered remains of a previous explorer. His expedition of 1984 to the Zodiac Caverns off Grand Bahama extended exploration by 7,500 feet and discovered spectacular submarine caverns which were filmed for BBC

A less-than-satisfactory Operation Raleigh venture into the Blue Holes in 1985 led Palmer to initiate the Andros

Project, an international scientific and exploration expedition, bringing to these submarine caves the largest team of expert divers and scientists ever assembled there. Between 1986 and 1988, a maze of deep and stunning passages were discovered, surveyed and unique collections made of their corals and other wildlife. Very deep diving was achieved using high pressure helium and oxygen mixtures and the prototype Carmellon rebreather system, which enabled Parker to reach a maximum depth of minus 320 feet.

He found a large underwater cavern at minus 260 feet in the newly-discovered Porcupine Hole which, when his gas supplies forced him back, still led on tantalisingly, with no apparent bottom. In recent years Palmer and his wife Steffie Schwabe had settled in the Bahamas, where they set up the Blue Holes Foundation to safeguard these wonderful caves from unwelcome exploitation and to preserve their unique environment. Rob Palmer knew he was often operating at the extreme limits of knowledge. "Life at the frontier is fragile," he would warn others. It happened he was temperamentally suited to research and development. To a talent for methodical analysis and prediction, he added the courage to pur predictions into practice. He also had a head cool enough to cope when anything unforeseen went wrong. He was competent, calm and reliable the ideal dive partner, as many have

As in many disciplines, the "extreme end" eventually leads the general direction. Mixed gas technology, which Palmer and others pioneered, in time passed also into recreational and openwater diving to become universally known as "technical diving". Palmer's manuals on Nitrox diving, and in particular his An Introduction to Technical Diving (1994), models of cogency, have become the Bibles of the sport. He felt strongly that diving should have few rules, other than the primary life-savers. Progress and new technology should not be resisted. In this, he often found himself cast as a mediating spokesman, not just be-tween the sport and a wider public, but also between advanced divers and the more conservative training organ-isations to whom he would justify the apparent risks taken by those pushing the limits of deep diving and cave diving.

DONALD NICHOLL

Donald Nicholl, historian and theologian, died on May 3 aged 73. He was born on July 23, 1923.

PROPHETIC" is not a word that should be casually used but there was a sense in which it applied to Donald Nicholl. There was something about the depth and incisiveness of his insight into human affairs, and about the scope and maturity of his moral and religious convictions, which lent his utterances a rare authority for our own times. His regular articles and commentaries in the Roman Catholic weekly The Tables were eagerly awaited. There was in him a combination of qualities intellectual and imaginative, affective but critical that somehow contrived to make an impression of a quite exceptional mind and Donald Nicholl was born to a working-class. Church of England family in Halifax and was brought up in the West Riding. He retained to the last a deep appreciation of his Yorkshire roots. At school he displayed intellectual and physical qualities that could not be hidden — he grew to be almost oft oin tall. When the masters at his grammar school decided that he would do best by specialising in history, he promptly won a Brackenbury Scholarship to Balliol. Under wartime regulations he was allowed to spend a year there before being called up. In the Army he served in the Far East — in India, Ceylon and finally, after its recapture from the Japanese, in Hong Kong.

Returning to Oxford in 1946, he was received into the Roman Catholic Church, having come under the influence the Dominicans of Blackfriars. A student of Richard Southern's, he initially seemed set to become a medievalist (it was typical of him that, having made that decision, he resolved that, to understand medieval Britain, he would need to be familiar not just with Latin but with Irish and Welsh as well). After four years teaching in Edinburgh, he became a lecturer in history at Keele, staying in Staffordshire for twenty years, being appointed a Reader in 1970 and receiving a personal Chair in 1972. His real gifts as a teacher were never in doubt.

His interests, however, could not be confined to the Middle Ages. He was fascinated by the urgent intellectual and spiritual issues of our own time. Like Tolstoy, he was caught by the question of "that by which men live". In the 1950s he travelled widely in France and Germany, making contact with many of the leading Catholic thinkers of the day. Long before such things became generally talked about in this country, he was fully aware of the kind of changes that were to follow Vatican II.

In 1974 he was appointed by the University of California to be Professor of History and Religious Studies at Santa Cruz. Here his informal and arresting teaching methods found full scope. Students found a guru whose mind was lucid, whose personal lifestyle was modest and unpretentious and whose dry but kindly sense of humour left no room for humbug either in himself or others.

His stay in California was a very fruitful one but in 1980 he returned to Britain and in 1981 was chosen to be director of the Ecumenical Institute at Tantur near Jerusalem, an international centre for theo-

international community. By the time of his return to Britain in 1985, he was becoming known as a writer. Holiness (1981) was a classic — deceptively simple, both illuminating and disturbing. From his time at Tantur he produced a diary book, The Testing of Hearts (1989). He became more and more involved in inter-faith relations. contributing much to the work of the Inter-Faith Research Centre at Selly Oak, Birmingham. He was also much in demand as a conductor of Retreats, particularly for Anglican communities.

For many years he had been drawn to the study of 19thcentury Russia. This attraction resulted in a book The Triumphs of the Spirit in Russia (1997) which was finished shortly before he became ill last year and was published a week before his death. Another, and larger, collection of his essays and papers. The Beatitude of Truth edited by his literary executor, Professor Adrian Hastings formerly of Leeds University, will appear in Donald Nicholl married in 1947 Dorothy Tordoff. She survives him together with a son and four daughters.

DUDLEY POPE

Dudley Pope, naval historian and novelist died in the West Indies. on April 25 aged 71. He 29, 1925.

A PROLIFIC writer, Dudley Pope was responsible for some Il titles on naval history as well as for more than twenty novels. Two of his works of fiction, Corvey (1979) and Decoy (1983), were set in the Second World War, but it is for the adventures of Lieutenant Nicholas Ramage, a fictional contemporary of Horatio Nelson, that he will be best remembered.

ment from C.S. Forester that Pope first turned his hand to fiction. After reading his historical account of the Battle of Trafalgar, England Expects (1959). Forester suggested to Pope that he should try his hand at naval fiction. Six years later Pope published Ramage, the first in what was to become a burgeoning series about his eponymous hero.

Taking place largely during the Napoleonic wars, the 18 novels in the Ramage series are packed with adventure and shipboard intrigue, though the author's passion for research is also evident in the degree of historical accturacy they contain:

Dudley Egerton Pope was born in Ashford, Kent, and educated locally at Ashford Grammar School. Despite his interest in naval history, an accident at sea when he was 18 his fascination with naval denied him the chance ever to matters. living aboard boats serve in the Royal Navy. In his desire to sea he left school at 15 and tied about his age to join the Merchant Navy as a midshipman.

In October 1942 his ship, Silverwillow, was torpedoed in the North Atlantic while on convoy from Freetown, Sierra Leone. Forced to abandon ship. Pope spent several days. with other survivors, aboard a lifeboat before being rescued. He was seriously wounded in the attack and his injuries, including damage to his spine. meant that he had to be invalided out of the Merchant Navy. Still keen to contribute to the war effort, after a period of convalescence, he joined the Home Guard. In 1943 he started work as a junior reporter on his local newspaper in Kent and soon after the end of the war he progressed to Fleet Street. where he again lied about his age when he secured a job with London's Evening News, as defence correspondent. In 1957 he was promoted to deputy foreign editor.

Throughout his time on the Evening News Pope nurtured

MURRAY KEMPTON

Murray Kempton, urnalist, died in New York on May 5 aged 79. He was born on December 16, 1917.

MURRAY KEMPTON was a courtly, independent figure in the world of American journalism. His columns in the New York Post and Newsday made famous not only their author's wit and perception but his moral integrity. Among his many awards, he won the Pulitzer Prize for his writing in Newsday during the 1980s. He was still working part-time for that newspaper until the time of his death.

Kempton, once the American correspondent of The Spectator, was an elegant writer who was able to bring a remarkable knowledge of literature, history and political thought to bear on a whole range of subjects, from Goya at the Metropolitan Museum to Yassir Arafat in Netanyahu's Israel. With his ability to detect humbug and hypocrisy, Kempton could be savage in condemnation but, where he thought it appropriate, his admiration was equally unstinting. Walter Goodman, in a 1994 review in The New York Times of a collection of Kempton's columns, wrote of his "affection for the stand-up rebel, the loser, the rascal".

Choosing always to follow his own instincts, Kempton could often be counted on for a response that was unpredictable. This refusal to be pigeonholed won him followers of every political stripe.

Kempton always showed immense courtesy, even to those he condemned as scoundrels. Unlike many of his liberal colleagues, he forgave Richard Nixon for Watergate and came to the former President's defence when he was prevented from moving into a Manhattan apartment block by residents of the condominium who did not exhibit the same degree of tolerance.

Kempton's ornate writing style was celebrated and sometimes mocked. The former New York Mayor, Ed Koch, a long-standing Kempton tar-get, once sneered that "there was always one or two sentences which no one understood - that gave him a special cachet". On another occasion. Kempton was sued for libel. The plaintiff lost his case because the jury simply could not work out what the offending sentences meant. James Murray Kempton was born in Baltimore, the only child of a stockbroker who died when Murray was three, and of Sally Ambler Kempton, whose family were of old Southern stock. He attended Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and, on his graduation in 1939, he served briefly as a social worker in Baltimore. He became a newspaperman in 1942, when he went to work for the New York Post. When war intervened he served in the Philippines and rejoined the Post in 1946, becoming its labour editor in 1949. Kempton always saw himself primarily as a reporter. He was a familiar sight on the streets of Manhattan, speeding downtown on his bicycle with earphones (he was passionately interested in [222) clamped to his wispy white hair. Nothing was beneath his notice: he attended court proceedings, traffic accidents. funerals and speeches by both the known and the unknown. To Bob Silvers, his Editor at the New York Review of Books. the wonder was how Kempton could make "small, revelatory theatre" out of matters as mundane as the various interests at work in a court-room when a defendant was denied bail

THE REMOVAL OF WESTMINSTER SCHOOL. Yesterday morning a meeting of Old

Westminsters was held in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey, to take into consideration matters of grave importance connected with the welfare of Westminster School. The meeting was very numerously attended. The Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster having taken the chair stated that the object of the meeting was to elicit the opinions and feeling of those present who had been educated at the school with regard to the question of its removal, and with this view he should abstain from then expressing the opinion of the Chapter on the subject, but should merely place before the meeting the arguments for and against that removal. In the first place, there could be no doubt of the fact that the school, which 30 or 40 years ago used to number 300 or 400 boys, did not contain more than 150. This was purely to be attributed, it was said by the advocates of the removal, to the indisposition of parents to send their children to

This meeting of the great and the good, in the tercentenary of the school's foundation, was largely in favour of a move. The plan was later dropped. mainly because of the cost.

a school no longer on the outskirts but in the heart of a great town; opposed to this was the opinion of those who thought that to change the site of the school would be to violate the religio loci and destroy those associations connected with the position of the school on classic ground under the shade of the Abbey. It was a grave and serious question beset with difficulties, and though the Dean and Chapter were not inclined to abdicate their rights and responsibilities as guardians of this Royal Foundation, they were desirous of ascertaining how far the feeling of Old Westminsters would sanction the proposal of a removal provided the Royal sanction could be obtained. The Dean was followed by Lord Edbury, who advocated the retention of the school on its present site, but proposed that it should be recast into a middle-class day school. Lord Charles Russell was convinced that the most desirable course was to remove the school. Lord Llanover saw no reason why the old school, if removed to a suitable distance from the metropolis, should not revive. The Dean of Christ Church said that numbers were everything in a school. Without numbers it was impossible to maintain the healthy competition among the boys. With regard to the removal of the school, he thought, considering the bad position of many of our public schools - Eton notoriously unhealthy, Winchester in a swamp, Harrow and Rugby without water - that it would be possible to find a position which should combine every advantage for the new school.

A SMALL nursery furniture company is seeking damages from Next. the retail group, for allegedly copying its designs.

Emma Jefferson Partnership, a husband and wife partnership based in Leicestershire, allege that a number of its designs, which originally appeared on its own height charts. have re-appeared without permission on products that are sold through Next Directory.

The writ which was Issued yesterday, claims that a bed linen set for children - complete with curtains, fabric, self-adhesive border, floor cushion and pleated uplighter sold by Next all bear a pattern "which reproduces in material form the whole or a substantial part of the plaintiff's work". The designs are of a soldier, a policeman and a fireman.

Emma Jefferson said: We wanted to settle amicably but Next took a month to reply, say their designer hasn't seen our brochure and I feel they are calling our bluff." The partnership is seeking an injunction. preventing Next from selling the pattern, as well as damages and costs.

David Jones, chief executive of Next, said he was aware of the complaint but that the company had not yet decided on its Next faced an attack on another front yesterday when a private shareholder at its annual meeting in London questioned the decision to appoint Simon Wolfson, son of the company chairman. Lord Wolfson of Sunningdale, to the board.

David Jones defended the decision, saying Mr Wolfson had a fine track record. The appointment was voted through by shareholders.

Next found favour in the stock market yesterday. The shares rose 26p to a high of 720p after the annual meeting that the strong trading that the group reported a few weeks ago has continued.

In the first 14 weeks of this year. Next Retail sales have advanced 19 per cent while those at Next Directory are up 38 per cent on a year ago.

Taken together, sales for the Next brand were 24 per cent ahead of last year. "We are clearly taking market share." Mr Jones City expects predator to pounce on demerged unit before flotation

Fine Art division on the cards

SHARES in Fine Art Development rose 35½ p to 276p yester-day after the company announced plans to demerge its greetings card business to create the biggest company of its kind in Europe.

The price rise reflected City speculation that the division ill attract a trade buyer before it reaches the stock market. However, the shares still trade at a big discount to last year's high of 530p.

Keith Chapman, chairman. said: "I'm not aware of any potential predators but I can't categorically rule it out. It's very unlikely and we will resist any offers. We've had approaches before but I see no reason why it should go. The company is extremely well managed." The cards division, yet to be named, supplies retailers such as J Sainsbury. Tesco, Marks and Spencer. Woolworth and WH Smith.

The other half of Fine Art Development is a mail order business that concentrates on education supplies, charity trading and express gifts. The distinction between the two divisions had become clearer over the past two years on the disposal of assets, the last of which was Papertree, the retail business, sold to The Greetings Company for £5.9 million in March. Fine Art also recently sold Tom-Wat. its troubled US mail order operation, in a move that incurred a £1.8 million loss.

Mr Chapman said: "We think each business will be able to operate much better on its own. Investors will be able to assess each company individually,

However, both the divisions continue to report disappointing results. Last year, the mail order business suffered a slump in profits, from £26.7 million to £18.1 million. The card division's profits fell from £24.7 million to £22.1 million because of the cost of rationalising its wholesale business, which suffered a E12 million drop in sales.

The underlying prospects of the cards division were encouraging, however, with a 10 per cent rise in sales last year, from £83.4 million to £91.7 million, and a 15 per cent rise in operating profits, from £13.7 million to £15.8 million. US sales grew 10 per cent.

Meanwhile, group pre-tax profits — before exceptional charges of £5.94 million for losses on disposals — fell to £30.1 million, from £41.1 million, cutting earnings per share from 33.2p to 23.5p. The dividend has been held at 164p a share, after a final payout of 12.8p.

GE action against EMI

GE LIGHTING, the former GE Thorn Lamps, is suing EMI, the music recording, publishing and HMV retail group, for £2.8 million, in a row over an alleged environmental indemnity. The action, lodged at the High Court in London, dates to 1991, when Thorn EMI, as it was before EMI's demerger, is alleged to have made certain undertakings to GE Thorn Lamps, and Thorn Lighting Limited. The writ makes reference to the investigation and cleaning up of hazardous materials. Neither party was

Cirqual raises funds

CIRQUAL, the specialist engineering group, yesterday announced a £15.4 million placing and open offer to fund the acquisitions of Thomas Wild Forgings, a casting business, and RFL Siebe's electronic components division. The acquisitions were completed last week and cost £14.7 million. The 6.5 million shares issued have been conditionally placed with institu-tions at 248p each. ### Woolwich float approved

THE Woolwich Building Society can now start counting the days until its flotation after it was given the official go-ahead to convert to a bank. The Building Societies Commission has formally cleared the Woolwich conversion, it announced yesterday. More than 2.5 million members of the society will get free shares worth an average of E1,233 this summer. July,7 is the planned conversion date. In February, Woolwich members voted overwhelmingly for conversion, but the commis-sion has the final say. Carpetbaggers deterred, page 32

Kingspan disposal

KINGSPAN GROUP, the engineering company, has sold the structural steel business of Ward to a management buyout team. The deal is supported by a total funding package of E11.3 million. Kingspan is being paid in cash and preference shares for a business with sales of £49.3 million last year. It had owned the business since January when it purchased Ward from Rugby Group for £25.9 million. Kingspan is to retain Ward's building components business. Shares in Kingspan were unchanged at 695p yesterday.

Ecology assets top £20m

THE Ecology Building Society has topped £20 million in assets for the first time in its 16-year history. The society, based near Keighley, West Yorkshire, has 5,500 investing members and has issued about 500 mortgages. It claims to be the only society that uses a policy of basing its lending on the renovation of older properties and on new homes that are energy efficient and involve materials that cause as little pollution as possible.

Nobo issues warning

NOBO, the office products supplier, accompanied a profit warning with news of an approach that may lead to a takeover bid for the company. Nobo said that it had suffered a downturn in demand for office products in the key final quarter of its financial year, which was likely to cause a fall in pre-tax profits from £2.93 million to about £1.9 million before exceptional charges for the year to May 3. Nobo also said that talks were taking place that may lead to an offer being made for the company, valued at £22 million at yesterday's closing share price of 124p, down 142p.

rates. Southern Electric is the only regional electricity company not to have been bought after the spate of takeovers in the past two years. With a market capitalisation of more than £2 billion, the company would be a huge purchase. A spokesman for National Power said that the generator had always intended to sell the Southern it when it bid for the company. but had been waiting for suitable conditions. At its interim figures National Power said it had incurred a loss of £56 million linked to the abortive Southern bid in losses on the shares, bid costs and its own defence work when it was approached by Southern Company of the US. The deal was done through HSBC James Capel and the price was about 420p. Southern Electric shares rose ip to 426 p yesterday while National Power rose 3½p to 566½p.

to sell $256m stake

ANTOFAGASTA Holdings, the UK-listed group with extensive mining and transport interests in Chile, is to raise $256 million through the sale of a stake in the Los Pelambres copper mine, north of Santiago (Jon Ashworth writes).

Two Japanese consortiums. including Nippon Mining & Metals, Mitsui and Mitsubishi, are to take a 40 per freeing funds for Antofagasta's equity financing obligations on its remaining 60 per cent stake. Los Pelambres is being developed at a cost of Antofagasta said the Japanese deal took the mine a step forward in its development as a leading world-class producer of copper concentrates. Falling copper prices took their toll of the company last year, with pre-tax profits falling 43 per cent to £44.6 million in the year to December 31. The shares fell lp to 394p.

An immediate review of the options for the Post Office's future was announced by the Government yesterday. Although privatisation has been effectively vetoed, radical moves under consideration are likely to include allowing the Post Office to raise expansion fimds and engage in joint ventures. The programme of closing down Crown post offices has been suspended. Senior Post Office managers and the postal unions gave an enthusiastic reception to news of the review, which had been foreshadowed in Labour's preelection manifesto.

Government ministers and Whitehall expect to open talks with the Post Office on how best to give it greater commercial freedom, which Post Office managers insist they need to combat the twin threats of competition from foreign riered a British success story but it has felt hampered in its efforts to compete. The Conservative Government had considered privatisation as a solution to the problem but abandoned the plan in the face of opposition from its backbenchers, who feared the measure would put at risk the network of rural post offices.

Ian McCartney, Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry, announced the latest move after writing to Sir Michael Heron, Post Office chairman, stating that as a "high priority" the Government wants to open talks with the Post Office to review policy and discuss how best to give the Post Office the seeks. Sir Michael welcomed the move.

Mr McCartney said yesterday that for too long, the Post Office had been held back from developing its full potenthe privatised Dutch post office, had been allowed to "forge ahead". He added: "We now intend to remove unnecessary and damaging shackles, whilst ensuring that competition between the Post Office and the private sector takes place on a fair and transparent basis."

The Government is likely to reject any full or partial priva-tisation of the Post Office and ministers are expected to be against selling some of its constituent businesses, such as Parcelforce, the parcels delivery service, or substantial stakes in the business. The talks with the Post Office, postal unions and user groups will aim to find ways of giving the Post Office the opportunity it wants to agree joint ventures, for which the Treasury has previously re-£470 million last year.

The Post Office was concerned, however, about the Government's suspension of its programme to convert Crown post offices to agency status.

SIB poised to be Lloyd's regulator

By Jon Ashworth

THE Securities and Investments Board (SIB), the main City regulator, is set to take over the regulation of Lloyd's of London, under a bold series of proposals published yesterday. A leaner Lloyd's rulebook and more power for the Department of Trade and Industry are among the proposals that flow from an internal Lloyd's review. Lloyd's names welcomed the proposed changes, which will increase accounts bility at Lime Street, and limit

The fall came after a warning in The Times yesterday by Nigel Griffiths.

Minister for Consumer Affairs, that highcharging mortgage lenders and home credit companies were under review. Shares in Provident Financial, the largest door-to-door lender of small loans, slumped 52'zp, to 582'zp, in early trading, before closing at 5930. Other weekly credit collectors suffered. Cattles fell 25p, to 313½p, S&U 26½p, to 343½, and London Scottish Bank 4p, to 100p.

While lenders such as City Mortgage Corporation have come under Office of Fair Trading scruding, the country's 1200 home credit companies have so far escaped attention, although they charge APR (annual percentage rate) of between 100 and 500 per cent on their loans. Edward Cran, chief executive of Cat-

tles, said 52 per cent of adults could only get loans from home credit companies.

"Most Labour politicians have used the facilities of home credit companies in the

Ruth Evans, director of the National Consumer Council, called for the creation of more credit unions. She urged the Government and local authorities to consider underwriting low-cost loans, but she cautioned that capping rates could create a black market.

Elaine Kempson, of the Policy Studies Institute, called for supermarkets and the Post Office to offer subsidised loans based on social security payments.

Transport sector drives London to closing high

A RALLY in the downtrodden transport sector helped London to achieve another meeting with the Government feeling much more relaxed about the threat of stiffer

The market, which was up some 30 points in early trading after another record run on Wall Street, slowly eased back to a 127 point gain over the afternoon to close only 12.7 points ahead at 4,693.9.

Shares of the bus and railway companies led the way, with FirstBus bouncing 21p to 221p to become the best performer on the FT-SE 250. It was closely followed by National Express, whose shares reversed their six-week fall by finishing 30p stronger at 51712p.

Stagecoach. Britain's largest operator of around-town buses, rose 1912p to 037p on heavy trading as Cowle Group gained 1212p to 37212p and Go-Ahead 17p to 40812p.

Glenda Jackson, Minister for London Transport is understood to have told Firstbus that the Government is looking for better service rather than price regulation, concentrating instead on penalising poor service.

However, these gains were countered by a slump in the shares of the major players in the consumer credit market after yesterday's report in The Times detailing government plans to crack down on exorbitant interest charges.

Worst hit was Cattles. which lost 13 per cent of its value at one point before recovering to close 25p down at 31312p, making it the sharpest failer on the FT-SE 250. Shares in Provident Financial. which has greater exposure to the consumer loan market, fell 4512p to 58912p. The dowturn went on to knock 512p from the shares of London Scottish Bank, now 98p. and S&U, which lost 2612p to close at 34312p.

Alcopops returned to haunt the drinks sector after the Government confirmed it is tackle the abuse by underaged drinkers. The news wiped 13p from shares of Bass, which commands 70 per cent of the alchopops market through its Hooper's Hooch brand. Its shares closed at 816p.

Scottish & Newcastle, which only three days ago agreed to market and distribute Merrydown's Two Dogs

at 7212p, as analysts reckoned a decline in alcopop sales could only be good news for sales of cider. Bulmer also held at 535p.

Retailers provided the FT-SE 100 with its highest climber and sharpest faller after a record high street run by Next shares gaining 35'ap to 276p on heavy trading. Shares of Jarvis were lifted by 9p to 280'ap as it confirmed it is in talks to acquire a railway track renewal company. This follows reports in the trade press that it may pay £28 million for RelayFast as a means of strengthening its hand in Scotland and making some cost savings with its Eurotherm's shares rose 13½p to 420p on speculation that Siebe may be sizing it up should its bid for APV fail. The company's market valuation has plunged by £120 million to £370 million this year alone and bid speculation is being fuelled by heavy trading in its shares with 1.4 million changing hands yesterday.

Group (sided to inject much optimism in the sector. Next raced ahead by 26p to a new high of 720p on the success of its spring/summer range. Its success served to throw Burton Group into worse light, as its shares plunged a further 5p. to 1400 on further reflection of the trouble at its flagship Burton Menswear chain.

Fine Art Development was buoyed by its plans to spin off existing business in the North West of England. Shares of National Power rose 4p to 566 ap as the company finally sold its 8 per cent stake in Southern Electric, left over from its abortive bid last spring. The stake leaves its cash balance well stocked, sparking rumours that it may wish to dispose of this through a special divi-dend. Southern Electric again

The lender at the door

MONEYLENDING is a growing business and it is interesting to consider why this should be so. The Government, marginally more concerned about the plight of the less well off than its predecessor, is keen to take up the cause of people who have little or no access to financial services. Poor people are less likely to have household insurance, life insurance and access to credit. However, they are more frequently burgled, they die younger and are more prone to cash flow problems.

Labour needs to look at this problem urgently but dispassionately because companies like Provident Financial, Cattles and London Scottish Bank fill a gap in the market that widens every day. The reason for growth in the door-to-door lending market is clear for all to see: banks are shutting down branches and fleeing the small loans sector. Instead, they are pursuing wealthier customers to whom they can sell high-margin financial products. Few, if any banks, will grant a loan of £200 and that is what the moneylenders provide to families who may have bank accounts but live on a weekly cash budget.

This is a rich seam for door-to-door lenders who charge interest rates that bear no relation to the wholesale cost of money. Moneylenders argue that the high rates cover the cost of weekly collection but that cannot be the whole story. The declining home service branches of insurers typically have expense ratios of 40 per cent but Provident Financial costs take up 60 per cent or more of its income but the company still earns a healthy 40 per cent return on equity. An industry with such high costs and high returns is inviting competition but moneylending seems to have escaped.

Fine Art Devs

THE question in any demerger is whether the sum of the parts is greater than the whole. In the case of Fine Art Developments, which yesterday announced the demerger of its card and paper products business, the jury is still out.

To assume that Fine Art's assets are worth more in small bits than lumped together is to assume one of two things. Either the market failed to understand Fine Art and one or both divisions were being undervalued because of ignorance, or the group's management was hindering the development of certain businesses because of lack of investment, incompetence or sheer cussedness.

There is scant evidence that either proposition is true. Some argue that the City failed to appreciate the jewel, having suffered a colapse in its wholesaling business last year. Fore the card to deserve a rerating its management. needs to do more than furnish its own boardroom. Likewise, the mail-order business needs to prove that

The chance of a bid excites some investors but the chances look slim. The cards business may be desirable but the obvious buyers, such as Hallmark, would have monopoly problems. A buyer of the mail-order business

Gallaher

WHAT do you call a company whose strategy involves cutting 600 jobs in Manchester while pushing the sale of an addictive drug to people in the Third World? Gallaher is unlikely to appeal to the ethical investor, but its launch on the London Stock Exchange could spark interest elsewhere. The tobacco sector of the stock market is growing in leaps and bounds at the same time as governments in the US and the UK tighten the noose around this pariah industry.

Gallaher's value will be a function of comparisons with IBLICE should not doud investor assessment too much as the obvious bidder, BAT, has agreed a two-year standstill with Gallaher, but the company may suffer a higher yield than its competitor, Imperial. Gallaher is a less efficient operator, enjoying slimmer margins - hence the planned closure of its Manchester plant in addition, Imperial has more clout in the low-priced end of the market, which is growing more rapidly than the big brands. Gallaher boasts Benson & Hedges and Silk Cut, but as the Government tightens the fiscal squeeze on tobacco, the discount market will take on more importance. Therefore, Gallaher could look cheap with a yield as high as 8 per cent. However, the American investors who hold all the stock may be anxious to sell and UK. punters -should check the mood stateside before plung-

Chrysalis

"UGLY Beautiful", the name of the hot-selling Babybird album on the Chrysalis Echolabel, could equally describe Chrysalis itself. The company, tightly controlled by the lavishly paid Chris Wright, loses beauty marks

-for its perennial inability to report profits, but wins on share performance. Indeed, the shares have almost doubled in the past year.

Mr Wright says that the TV, radio and music group is investing for the future and that the future looks bright: break-even, he insists, is just around the corner. But with the shares at such high levels, now may be the time to take Chrysalis has substantially reduced its operating losses, but the fledgeling Echo label is probably years away from generating profits. Radio is close to breaking even, but the company would gladly plunge the division back into regional radio licences to buy. Finally, the strength of division.

Chrysalis is doing the right things, but shareholders should cash in while it is still possible to do so.

Tuesday 🗸

LAST Saturday morning. Tony Greener was feeling relieved. The chairman was holed up in the central London offices of SJ Berwin, the solicitor, with about 60

industry executives hammering out the details of the £23 billion merger with Grand Metropolitan. The deal, which had been under discussion since George Bull, GrandMet chairman, proposed it over the filet mignon at Dukes Hotel in St James's Place on April 10, was to be announced two days later. Miraculously, the market had not had a sniff of the news. "Getting through to Friday evening without anything blowing up in the market was crucial," Greener recollects, leaning back at the broad table in his office overlooking Portman Square, central London, kicking off a shoe and exposing a sock with a hole in it. "If no one had guessed by Friday, we felt it would stay quiet until Monday."

Most of the senior staff at Guirmess were not told until after 8pm on Friday night Lawyers from the five UK and US law firms, bankers from Lazard Brothersand SBC Warburg, stockbrokers from Cazenove and accountants from KPMG and Price Waterhouse, were all called and dard, the City lawyer, and Marcus Agius, intensive work. A team of 15 secretaries worked in 12-hour shifts, taking notes, typing and photocopying documents.

Even over the final weekend, no one twin-ged, despite Berwin's of-fices being in the old home of The Times in Gray's Inn Road, next door to a building housing ITN, Reuters, The European and the London office of The

that side of the building," Greener says. The weekend was the culmination of a month of exploratory talks and, in the final formight, detailed discussions, to bring about a deal that Greener says everyone in both companies had known for about three years had to be done. Both GrandMet and Guinness had looked at bidding for the other company, as well as possibly snapping up smaller fish in the industry, such as Allied Domeon. To the briefing paper from its merchant bank, Lazard Brothers, exploring the possibility of a £13.2 billion aggressive bid for GrandMet had leaked last summer. Greener, a tall, distant 56-year-old who has not commanded a great deal of affection in the City, was forced into stating that Guinness was not going to make a hostile bid for GrandMet. We had run the numbers on a number of companies, and one had got into the public domain," he admits. "And a GrandMet had done the same. But a hostile bid by one company for another could not be justified.

"What that document showed was that a bid would see a destruction of shareholder value to the tune of £2.5 billion. The premium that we would have had to pay to get GrandMet shareholders to accept would not have been a good idea for our shareholders."

The dinner with George Bull had been in the two chairmen's diaries for months. They had known each other for 17 years and met regularly to gossip about the drinks business. "It's a good idea to every so often keep in touch with colleagues from the industry," Greener says. The issue of merger was raised by Bull during the merger was raised by Bull during the main course. He knew there would be an enthusiastic response. Greener had a business trip to Africa planned - visiting six Guinness opera-tions from Cape Town, South Africa, to Lagos, Nigeria, in seven days - and knew suspicions would be aroused if he cancelled. Unkind wags have speculated that Greener went on holiday, but he is not one for exotic trips, preferring to spend his time sailing, once completing the Sydney to Hobart yacht race, or skiing. "I haven't had much time for either recently," he says sternly.

Greener told Bull that Guinness would ask Angela Morgan at Theodore Godasked to turn up at SJ Berwin, on a director of Lazard Brothers, to look into Saturday morning for 48 hours of whether a deal could win approval, both from the competition authorities and the City. "I told George that if the results were positive I would talk to my board and let him know." says Greener. At this point the only Guinness director brought into the information loop was Philip Yea, the finance director. Greener returned from

Africa on Saturday, April

Scotsman. We pulled the blinds down on Morgan, who told him that the deal could be done. He then set about phoning the members of the Guinness board to get approval to enter detailed discussions with GrandMet. He was given unanimous backing. This included the approval of Bernard Arrisult, a Guinness non-executive and chairman of LVMH Moet Hennessy Louis Vuition, the French huntry goods group, which holds 142 per cent of Guirmess When the full merger proposboard, Arnault opposed them, instead suggesting a merger of LVMH's wine and spirits business with Guimess's. Greener is at pains not to irritate Arnault further by suggesting that he made a U-turn, first agreeing to and then opposing the deal.

"We got the approval from the board to explore the idea," Greener says. "This was not an agreement to proceed or to any particular structure."

By Sunday evening, Greener was able to phone George Bull and tell him that he reasonable betting man would guess that had been given the green light to see if a

The merger of the drinks groups may have taken the City by surprise but, as Tony Greener noted, the plan was conceived more than a year ago deal could be done. This meant that the real work was about to start - 12 days of intense negotiations shrouded in complete secrecy with the aim of putting full merger details to the boards of the two companies on Friday, May 9.

A core of four from Guinness and GrandMet came together to hammer out the deal - Greener and Yea from Guinness, Bull and John McGrath, chief exective of GrandMet from their side. The key to the success of the deal was hammering out the main points speedily and in secret.

Any sniff of the deal in the markets could dramatically move the share prices and spoil the idea that the two companies ikar level of drollis and market capitalisation - were coming word". "There were no stand-offs, no one Commission and the US anti-trust around for ever."

A top management structure was worked out quite quickly. Bull had already said he was going to retire in July next year, when he is 62, so this would allow Greener to become chairman of the combined group with the two sharing the job until Bull's retirement.

Most of the other board jobs dovetailed, though Firm Johnsson, the head of United Distillers, had to accept the number two post in the combined drinks business under Jack Keenan from GrandMet. while Gerald Corbett, GrandMet's finance director, is having to leave because, as Greener puts it, "there is no room for two finance directors". Asked about how ed in the combined company, Greener bereticent. "George has not discussed this," a public relations minder pipes up. "Well, I had better not discuss it either."

says Greener. It was clearly a difficult incident in the midst of negotiations that said 'this is a deal breaker'. On every single occasion we were able to deal with problems that came up," he emphasises.

The name of the new company was low on the priority list, as demonstrated by the decision to use the rather bland GMG Brands. Greener says they considered GGM but this reminded people too much

Of course, there are many issues outstanding, such as which head office the new group will use and where the 2,000 job cuts, which will bring the estimated £175 million of savings, will fall. Greener says these are details that can be thrashed out in the six months or so that it will take the various authority — to approve the merger. Fo Greener the deal is the culmination of a career that has taken him from his family's cotton mill to Dunhill, where he turned the cigarette maker into an international branded goods company, to his recent years at Guinness, keeping the profits up against a background of a declining market for spirits in the US and western Europe.

before he retires, but it is clear that he will oversee the company through the three years that he feels it will take for the full merger benefits to come through. 'It's for the non-executives to decide

MALCOLM BATES, chairman of Pearl Assurance, had a date with the Treasury on . Wednesday, we now know. He arrived, having taken the precaution of stuffing a copy of the Personal Investment Authority's code of conduct down the back of his pinstriped trousers, to be carpeted by Helen Liddell, Econonic Secretary to the Treasury, for Pearl's leading role in pensions mis-selling. Less well known is another meeting at the Treasury, 24 hours later. Geoffrey Robinson, Paymaster General, was discussing the Government's revamped Private Finance Initiative with the man handpicked from the world of business to conduct a thorough review of the PFL He is, of course, Malcolm Bates, chairman of the engineer Premier Farnell and a former deputy managing director at GEC, as well as being somthing in insurance, I believe. And they say a week is a long time in politics.

Peering in from the outside, and not happy about it, is Alastair Ross Goobey, chief executive of the Hermes fund and the nearest equivalent to PFI maestro under the Tories. The gossip has it that Ross

he was a Tory — as if Bates had survived all those years under Arnie Weinstock as some sort of closet leftle. The truth is more poignant. Ross Goobey, sensing the political wind, had been working to build PFI bridges with a potential new Labour administration. Trouble was, the new Labourite he had access to was Mike O'Brien, shadow City spokesman, who, come the election, ended up at the Home Office

A GUIDE to Britain's Best

Employers appears from the Corporate Research Foundation. A thousand companies were screened and the best hundred to work for singled out, in terms of respect for their staff and all-round cuddliness. Precious few City brokers and banks in there, saving Charterhouse, which one does tend to think of as a happy ship since the chief mate left. The only real big hitter to feature is Goldman Sachs. Goldman Sachs of the 15-hour days, of the broken marriages, of the weekendsare-for-wimps? Or is that Goldman Sachs that makes a few dozen of its staff millionaires every year? Truly, the path to happiness takes many directions.

Dream on

MARTIN SORRELL, Napoleonesque boss of the WPP advertising combine, gave the latest Stockton lecture at the London Business School on. Thursday night. He told assembled business people, including David Sainsbury and Derek Lewis, of research that showed that after just five minutes of any such lecture. the audience's attention rends to wander. Rather than listening to the speaker, they indulge in wild sexual fantasies, the research proves. Mr

Sorrell spoke for 50 minutes, to allow his audience's imagination full flight. Derek Lewis the former head of prisons, left well before the dinner. So no one managed to ask him whether the subject of Ann Widdecombe had earlier flitted across his mind.

Man of straw

JACK STRAW, our tough new Home Secretary, is to crack down on those pernicious alcopops, after surveys showing that more than half the nation's teenagers drink the stuff. But I suspect the producers have little to fear.

It appears that responsiblity for alcopops falls between various Government departments including the Home Office, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Agriculture. Why does one suspect Mr Straw is about to learn his first lesson in ministerial impotence?

 Leafing ostentatiously through this week's copy of New Statesman - we political. turncoats need all the credibility we can get — I note that the Staggers' drift to the sensible centre is proceeding apace. There is even an intelligent think-piece from Simon Heffer on whither the Conservatives. But what is this? "Celebrate the general election victory with a E30 saving on an annual subscription to the

New Statesman," it says, "and receive the new biography of Che Guevara - priced at £25 - free." Come, come, does no one there know the new Labour refrain: "The people's flag is deeply shred/Che was God.

Book of years THE fight for publishing

rights to one of the most eagerawaited political memoirs has been won. Hodder Headline will produce the first auto-biography by Sir Edward Heath. The book, as yet untitled, is not out until October next year, by which time Sir Edward will be 82. "It will be a very readable way of putting the whole of the post-War era in context," says Tim Hely Hutchinson, Hodder's chief executive. The former Prime Minister, whose previous publishing efforts were about sailing and music, has been working on the manuscript for

It will, I am told, mention Baroness Thatcher, a subject rarely far from Sir Edward's thoughts since he was ousted by the Iron Lady, and "punches won't necessarily be pulled," says Hely Hutchinson. "But I think it will be balanced." There's a first time for anything, I suppose.

Burdened by bonus regulations

idows and other rela-tives of deceased building society members are still facing difficulties staking a claim to bonus payouts, even though their right to receive these windfalls is enshrined in law.

Each society has its own complex rules for successor accounts and even if you know what to do, following the procedures can be difficult when you have just been bereaved. As an example, the following briefly covers how the Halifax TOURS SUCCESSORS

If a member dies before conversion day, his or her entitlement to free shares is normally lost because membership, one of the conditions for being eligible to receive free shares ends on death. However, special terms apply if the death of a member was notified to the Halifax before November 25, 1994 or between midnight on November 25, 1994 and midnight on the day before conversion. If the qualifying successor was a two-year investing member on the qualifying date, then he or she will be entitled to receive the basic distribution and any variable distribution that the deceased Lizanne Rose on problems of obtaining

windfalls due to the deceased

would have received. If the qualifying successor is not a two-year investing member. then he or she will be entitled to receive only one basic distribution. If the first-named joint holder of one or more share accounts and/or PIBS dies, and the death was notified ot the Halifax before midnight on the day before conversion day, the qualifying successor will be the second-named joint holder who becomes the sole or first named joint holder of all share accounts or PIBS.

A qualifying successor of a deceased borrowing member is entitled to receive the basic distribution only once as a borrowing member and/or as a qualifying successor, irre-spective of the number of times he or she qualifies.

Society acts to deter carpet-baggers

the Buttungnam ivinusing Society this week moved to stop "carpet baggers" from opening accounts to benefit from any windfall bonus. The Midlandsbased society increased the opening balance for its new savings accounts from £1,000 to £2,500.

The society said it had been forced to make this move because of the large numbers of speculative accounts being opened. The high level of activity meant that the 115-branch building society no longer felt that it could give its customers adequate service levels.

The society pointed out that about a third of the 100,000 accounts opened so far this year had been opened on a speculative basis. Birmingham Mid-shires has been one of those most botly tipped to demutualise, and thus provide a windfall bonus.

Speculative activity has almost certainly increased this year because billions of pounds are being freed up with the flotations of the Alliance &

among the remaining societies.

Two of the die-hard mutuals, the Nationwide and the Bradford & Bingley, will only require £500 to open an account. The Cheisea, Norwich & Peterborough and now the Birmingham Midshires require £2,500, while the Yorkshire and the Leeds & Holbeck require £1,000. First National, an Irish Republic building society, also appears poised to demutualise. Savers in this country must open an account in Dublin to be given the opportunity of participating in any share bonanza. The minimum amount needed to open an. account is £2,000.

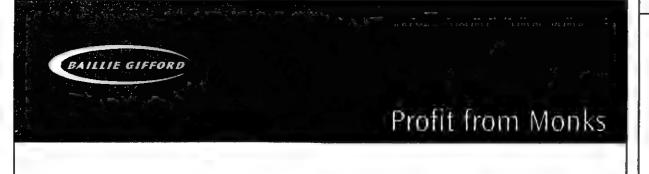

With only 16 days to go before the flotation of the Halifax, the UK's biggest building society, with a market capitalisation of more than £10 billion, stockbrokers are beginning to gear themselves up for the first few days of trading, when buying and selling of shares is likely to be at its heaviest. Analysts believe the Halifax share price will open far above the price of 432p estimated by its advisers in the transfer document published earlier this year.

The Alliance & Leicester is now trading at around 609p a share - 40 per cent higher than the price predicted by its advisers last October. The price rocketed on the back of institutions, such as Mercury, buying, and on the back of bid speculation.

Although the Halifax is too big to be a bid target, institutions will still need to buy the shares. Barclays Stockbrokers is offering a pre-registration facility for those who want to buy more shares on the first day of the Halifax float. Barclays charges 1 per cent, with a minimum of £10 for purchase of shares. NatWest's free 32-page guide to the windfall shares can be obtained by ringing 0300 200 400.

many victims have not even started to have their cases sessed because they are failing to respond to requests for more information from firms.

The Securities and Investments Board (SIB), the chief City watchdog, is planning to target such investors in a des-perate bid to persuade more people to respond. SIB con-fessed this week that two out of five investors were failing to fill sion providers. The question November in a bid to speed up compensation payments. A new set will be sent out in the next few weeks. If investors fail to Tony Nutiall left his job as a lighting director at Border. Television at the end of 1990. In September 1991, he transferred his £33,000 pension fund to Barclays Life Just three months after the transfer, he checked the value of his fund in the press and found it was worth only £30,000. Barelays admitted that it had advised him wrongly to transfer. Three years later. Barclays offered £6.500 compensation. undreds of victims of not satisfied with the response pension mis-selling from either regulator and are seeking redress contacted Ringrose Wharton, a Bristol solicitor, which is acting for hundreds of pen-

Two months later Barclays raised its offer of compensation to £20,500 after the losses were recalculated independentily. But the higher offer came on condition that he agreed to a gagging clause. This, coupled with further independent calculations claiming the loss could be as much as £48,000, spurred him into continuing his litigation. But this week, advised that he only had a 50:50 chance of warming more money, he accepted the £20,500 and £750 costs. He said: "I agreed not to cominue because I didn't want Investments Board. He was and I've got a family".

t is three years since Tracey Glester, 35, a name, contacted Weekend Money in her search for compensation from the Prudential. It had advised her to transfer from her generous National Health Service scheme to a personal pension.

The NHS has since reinstated her in its scheme but she wants the Pru to compensate her for three years' lost bene-fits. She abandoned the industry's own review process believing her case would be resolved more quickly in court. "I'll be of pensionable age by the time they sort that [the pen-sions review] out." She has received full support from the Royal College of Nursing, which is helping hundreds of its members in legal actions. The union is paying her costs.
Her case comes to court in June for pre-trial review.

No windfalls to tax at BT

Times change. Generations of schoolchildren and college students were told that the will of the people on tax matters, as represented by their MPs, was paramount, so long as it was expressed clearly and unequivocally in an Act of Parliament. No more. The Treaty of Rome and subsequent European Union laws rank higher. So, informally, do judgments on the European Convention on Human Rights. Even so, the chances of a successful legal challenge to what was billed as a windfall tax on excess profits of regulated privatised monopoly utilities seem slim, given that such a tax has the people's recent, overwhelming mandate.

Some of us have never suggested that such windfalls should be immune from tax. Far from it. In 1995, when the 12 regional electricity companies started paying out billions in surplus capital not thought to exist at the 1990 privatisation. they stood up and invited a tax.

When some, but not all, of the ten water companies followed suit under pressure from City shareholders, they too exposed financial windfalls that the Treasury, the City and their regulator had not originally allowed for. National Power and Powergen, the two big privatised power generating companies, did likewise, though they could argue that they were genuinely returning capital to shareholders because they had been forced to shed part of their previously dominant shares of the power market.

Taxing windfalls to shareholders of privatised utilities is as legitimate as it was in 1981 to tax interest rate windfalls to big clearing banks. In detail, all such taxes are inequitable between past and present shareholders. But if one-off taxes need to be raised, there is a case for taxing the ongoing company that represents shareholders as a whole.

Taxing windfalls or excess profits presupposes, however, that those taxed have enjoyed a windfall, or have gained some benefit from excess profits. British Telecom has caused something of a stink by suggesting that it would challenge a windfall tax in Gordon Brown's first Budget. Critics scoff that BT earns £100 a second, without positing what a reasonable profit per second might be. Sir Iain Vallance, BT's chairman, is right to challenge any windfall tax on his shareholders. All two million of us must surely be wondering how we missed this windfall that Mr Brown proposes to tax. Since the initial sale of 51 per cent in 1984 to date. BT shares have delivered to shareholders a lower capital return than the market average. Normal dividends have not been conspicuously above average. Special windfall handouts have been noticeable only by their absence. True, BT shares had an intial boost, partly because they only had to be paid for in instalments. Thereafter, they more or less followed the market average until 1994, when competition and regulation got tougher and returns fell well below average. A further quarter of BT shares were sold by the Treasury at the end of 1991, earning average returns for about 18 months and lousy returns thereafter. The last quarter were sold in 1993, giving buyers a miserable time. No windfall, but surely there have been excess profits. Comparisons show BT's profit margins and returns being higher than at many foreign telephone utilities, particularly in America, where regulation underwrites high costs. If excess profits have been earned, however, where have they gone? Certainly not to shareholders. Clearly, any benefit of excess profits was factored fully into the sale prices. Any excess profits have already gone to the Treasury.

ith luck, the Government will fulfill its election promise and tax only windfalls. If it does so, BT, along with the relics of British Gas and others, will have nothing to fear. If a tax is levied crudely on the profits or turnover of privatised utilities, then BT as the biggest will inevitably pay most. But that would not be a legitimate tax. It would be reparations levied by a conqueror on old Labour's oldest symbolic enemy. That would deserve to be challenged, whatever the outcome.

A QUESTION OF MONEY

t a time when Nigel Griffiths, Minister for Consumer Affairs, has warned lenders against chargvulnerable borrowers exhorbitant rates and Gordon Brown, the Chancellor, has passed the power of making interest rate decisions to the Bank of England, consumers would do well to turn their attention to interest rates. Bank of England officials made it clear that rates might have to rise again to keep inflation in check. Last week the base rate was raised one quarter of a point to 6.25 per cent, a move followed by home-loan rises.

What is an annual per-centage rate (APR)?

An APR is the yardstick used to compare borrowing. It is a single figure representing the annual cost of a loan when interest and all fees are taken into consideration. It was introduced in the Consumer Credit Act of 1974 to help consumers to understand the true cost of borrowing.

Many characters in Radio Four's The Archers, including Phil and Jill are currently fretting over rising interest rates only a fraction of that time, after which most revert to the current variable rate. If a lender takes the discounted rate and applies it to the life of the loan, the APR will be unrealistically low. But lenders cannot predict, with any certainty, where interest rates will be when the mortgage discount expires. After a ruling against the Scarborough Building Society, which advertised an APR about 25 years, but the discount or fixed-rate period is of 1.1 per cent for a discounted mortgage, most lenders are now calculating APRs by applying the standard rate after the end of the discount period. But some lenders are still going by an earlier court ruling. which appears to contradict the Scarborough ruling.

want a share certificate should sign and date page two of form A. Halifax's Pep has also caused concern with an obscure option to pay dividends in the form of shares, rather than cash, the usual method. Anthony Woods, a Times reader and retired corporate lawyer, says paying shares would deprive Pep investors of a 20 per cent tax credit and allow the converting society to save up to £7 million in advanced corporation tax a year. However, John Warburton, the Pep's product manager, said paying in shares would only be in exceptional circumstances and would never be to the disadvantage of investors.

Anne Ashworth and Caroline Merrell on pre-Budget options

Pensions could be in Chancellor's sights

don Brown, the Chancellor, is expected to deliver the first Labour Budget since Denis Healey raised the red box on April 3, 1979. The pace of change in the first week of the Labour Government has led many to believe that Mr Brown will not only concentrate on the windfall tax for the utilities but also on a significant number of other measures.

Clients of some accountancy firms are said to be concerned about a possible wealth tax, to be imposed on those with wealth above a certain limit. Such a tax exists in France and Switzerland, Geneva has a maximum wealth tax of 4.5 per cent. Mr Brown's intentions in this area are unclear. But it is widely predicted that he will make himself unpopular in Belgravia and Knightsbridge by closing some of the capital gains and inheritance tax loopholes exploited by the wealthy. However, If there are tax rises, those on more modest incomes will not be spared. As John Whiting, of Price Waterhouse, the accountants, said: it's easiest to hit those on middle incomes, as they are sitting ducks, since their salaries are subject to PAYE."

Besides another five-point relief, the most likely measure is a cut in pension tax reliefs. Many people are taking action now, putting money into penhigher-rate relief while it is still available. But such moves may prove futile, as Barbara Will-Berry Birch & Noble, the independent financial adviser, said: The timing of the Budget means they could bring in the change in this tax year, which means that it could be too late to benefit from the higher-rate tax relief. The changes could be backdated to April 6." Mr Whiting added: "It is the norm not to backdate tax changes, but since Labour has a majority of 179, anything is possible." He said the usual procedure was to make changes applicable from Budget day, the next day, or the

One of the most hotly tipped Budget changes is a restriction of the tax relief on pension contributions to the basic rate of 23 per cent, saving the Government about £1 billion a vear. Charles Levett-Scrivener, of Towry Law, the financial advisers, said: "The real decision should be where people invest these extra contributions. The level of the market is very high at the moment, so it may be advisable to put the extra money in to a cash fund until

To date, the usual rumours about the abolition of the taxfree lump sum available when pensionable age is reached have not surfaced. If this concession did become a Budget target, Mr Whiting said the Chancellor would be unlikely to hit those now retiring. He said: "It would be more likely to apply to those joining schemes. This means that if you resign your job and join a new pension scheme, you would not enjoy the tax-free lump sure."

Accountants report brisk business in the setting up of trusts and the making of gifts to preempt any removal of various inheritance tax (IHT) concessions. One possible target is potentially exempt transfers Pets), lifetime gifts that will be free of IHT, provided that the donor survives for seven years. For those feeling generous, now is the time to seek an accountant's help to give money away. Unlimited amounts can be distributed.

Mr Brown is also pledged to increase the sting of capital gains tax. Here reinvestment disappear. This allows people to reinvest the proceeds of a profitable investment in unquoted shares and escape tax.

Higher taxes on drinks seem unlikely, as Labour seems yet to have decided a stance on indirect taxation. As Mr Whiting explains, Britain has traditionally raised large amounts revenues from taxes on for the social security payroll

Caroline Merrell and Gavin Lumsden reveal the hidden costs of investing

Do charges take too big a bite from your investment?

ay I was not just a significant day for the Labour Party. For many in the investment business, May Day was also a crucial date. For the first time, millions of people who invest-billions of pounds in invest-ment and unit trusts and pensions will be given more accurate information about how much the returns on their investments are diminished by the commissions to middlemen, and management and administration charges. Previous reforms affected only life insurance companies. New rules to make charges clearer met opposition from unit and investment trust

Charges can take huge bites from investment returns. But, in the past, it has been difficult for investors to work out the impact of these deductions. Here The Times looks at how the charges impact on two widely held and widely promoted investments, a pen-sion plan from a blue-blooded City investment house and a Pep with 36,000 investors.

Pension plans

This year Flemings, the invest-ment house, launched a per-sonal pension based on its stable of investment trusts. It was claimed to be one of the cheapest pensions available, a frequent claim nowadays among providers.

At the launch Flemings compared its charges to those deducted by competitors in the low-cost market, such as Legal & General, Virgin and Norwich

Union. Flemings promised to be cheaper than all of these. In a much-publicised row, Virgin disputed the figures and said that Flemings was exploiting a loophole in the previous disclosure rules allowing it to loophole has been closed. Those who invest in the Flemings Investment Trust pension can put their money into one of a number of different funds, each with its own investment criteria. They include Fleming American and

Fleming Chinese The Personal Investment Authority (PIA), the watchdog, says that investment and unit trusts must follow the same pattern of expenses and charges disclosure as life insurance and personal pension products. This means that the manager must calculate the total charges over the lifetime of the investment and their impact on a hypothetical return; most companies assume a re-

The charges on Flemings funds vary. For example, the charges on Fleming American

Now, when the different charges are compared on the pension plans, Flemings can no longer claim that it offers the lowest-cost pension. For example charges on Equitable Life's pension only reduce the notional 9 per cent return to 8.1 per cent, while charges on Virgin Direct's pension cut 9 per cent to 7.8 per cent. Both are cheaper than the Flemings

The Fleming charges seem cheap when compared to Skandia's MultiPep, one of the best-selling Peps. More than 36,000 investors have pumped £250 million into MultiPep since launch three years ago. attracted by the opportunity to choose between 75 Peps from

However, investors pay a high price for this flexibility and there are fears that many are not making the most of it. According to the scheme's new Key Features document detailing charges, the notional 9 per cent annual growth rate is cut to 5.56 per cent for lump-sum investors, a huge reduction in yield of 3.44 per cent. The situcontributors into MultiPep. claim its product was cheaper who see growth reduced to when it was not. Now this 4.96 per cent (a reduction in yield of 4.09 per cent).

The reason for the shortfall is that investors are charged twice, once by Skandia and again by the managers of the 75 Peps. The effect of double charging means investors can give away more than they earn, even over the long term. For example, assuming 9 per cent annual growth again, if you invested £6,000 over 10 years in Jupiter Income, a topselling Pep, via MultiPep, you would receive £7,730, an increase of £1,730. Not bad? You might not be so pleased to find Skandia and Jupiter. Before the PIA's disclosure rules came into force, Skandia defended itself against accusations of double-charging by saying it was able to get discounts from fund managers such as Jupiter. However these discounts only apply to the initial charges and rarely negate them completely.

that £1.930 has gone to

For instance, Skandia knocks off 4.53 per cent of the 6.38 per cent fee charged by Jupiter Income. It then levies its own 4.5 per cent fee, giving a total upfront charge of 6.35 per cent. When it comes to annual charges Skandia negotiates no discount and adds its own 0.75 per cent. This pushes the annual cost of investing in Jupi-ter Income through MultiPep to 2.35 per cent.

Skandia says MultiPep investors have yet to exploit properly the ability to switch between funds at reduced cost. begging the question why they stuck with their original selection, says Andre Oszman, the scheme's manager. So wouldn't it be better for them to buy the underlying Pep fund direct from the manager? "We never said we were cheap. If all you want to do is buy a fund from one manager and have a collection of plans over the years, there are cheaper ways of doing it," he

You have been warned — it might be wise to build up your assets outside MultiPep.

PORTS TO WATCH

Before you part with your money, read your key features document which details the aims of the investment, the radically redesigned.

The most revealing information comes in the sections on charges. Fund managers now have to show how their fees will decrease the return on your investment, whether you invest regularly, or with a lump sum. To do this they assume annual growth for Peps of 9 per cent and 7.5 per cent for unit trusts. Pep charges, for instance, tend to reduce the yield by about 1.5 per cent to 7.5 per cent.

Pidelity's Investment Trust Share Plan has no initial; no annual, no dealing, and no exit charges. There's also no limit to the amount you can invest. Now you know. Contact us or speak to your IFA.

the twentieth century. This week, in spite of pronouncements from the Bank of England about the need for higher interest rates, the market hit new record highs. At the end of the week, the FT-SE 100 index reached 4,693.9, 24 per cent higher than 12 months

Now all eyes are on the first Labour Budget which many believe will be crucial for the market's short-term direction. As the graphs above show, the stock market has risen almost continuously since the end of the 1970s. The previous beginning of 1920, and continued to 1936, just before the start of the second world war. During these years, the value of an equity portfolio with all income reinvested rose 1,257 per cent, or the equivalent of 17.7 per cent per annum.

Today's bull market, which seems to have an almost unstoppable quality, has now gone on for longer than that preceeding the Second World War. From 1991 to 1996, equities rose 517 per cent in total, or 12.9 per cent per annum. Taken in context, the much publicised stock market crash of 1987 seems more like a setback, than a reverse in fortunes. The 1990 decrease. provoked by the Gulf War. was much more marked. Over the year the decrease in the market, adjusted for inflation. was 19.1 per cent.

UK market conditions are beginning to emulate those in the US, where the Dow has also continued to US stocks have been driven forever upwards by money pouring in from the babyboom generation investing in equities market to save for their retirement.

Retail investors in the UK do not yet have the same appetite for equity investment as those in the US, but with £22 to be released to more than one in three households this year, & Leicester, Woolwich and the Northern Rock go ahead, UK investors seem set to take more of an interest in investment in British companies.

The selection of Frank Field,

MP for Birkenhead, to be a second to Harriet Harman at the Department of Social Security could also lead to greater participation by UK savers in the equity market. He favours some privatisation of the State pension - which will aimost inevitably lead to greater investment in UK companies. ... are asking is whether this buil run in the UK is sustainable. In previous years in this century, bull runs have been bought to a head by international influences. A Labour landslide in 1945 heralded the start of a bull market. Internationally, there were at least four minor wars going on, and Stalin's influence on shaping

tor of Credit Suisse Investment Funds, thinks the market's future depends on the success of Labour policies. He foresees two scenarios, one beneficial for the market, the other disastrous. If Gordon Brown's first Budget combines rises in both personal corporate and indirect taxes, with measures to encourage companies to invest in development, this scenario would be "incredibly positive for the UK stock market on a long term view."

He added: "One of the stock market's main coocerns was a ity to control inflation. This uncertainty has been removed by the move to give the Bank of England independence on monetary policy. This is good news for gilts and should also help to underpin equities in ... This is because many unit the short term." Dr Mott continued: The second more pessimistic scenario would occur if taxation

ticularly in the personal sec-tor." This would force the Bank to continue to raise interest rates to damp down tion, leading to a further appreciation in sterling. Short term, the stock market would. continue to rise, with financial stocks leading the way and ex-porters suffering from a strong pound. He added the stock market would finally: succumb to the inappropriateness of this policy." Bardays Stockbrokers managing director, sees danger overseas. "An earthquake or banking collapse in Japan could trigger a sudden drop in the markets. Banks in the US and Japan are linked. A Jap anese banking collapse could start an international dovaiwards spiral."

He also fears sudden ficreases in inflation perhaps caused by a big rise in compodity prices which could in could also fall if interest rates ments from equities to cash?

Let bargaining begin over Labour's new tax, says Matthew Wall

BT line is cross on windfall tax

abour's most widely trailed proposal has been the windfall tax on the privatised utilities and yet its implementation is still shrouded in mystery. There is plenty of scope for some big surprises and a lot of bitter wrangling between business and Government. On Thursday, both BAA and BT threatened that they would take court action if they were subject to the tax.

The Queen's Speech on Wednesday merely confirmed that the legislation would be prepared in Parliament's first session. Details will not be available until the Budget in June or July.

City consensus suggests the tax will raise between £3 billion and £5 billion and will be targeted mostly at the water and electricity industries, where regulation is deemed to have been particularly lax. The electricity indus-try has made £25.3 billion in pre-tax profits since privatisa-tion in 1990-91 while the water industry has made £10.5

Most water and electricity companies have already made provision for the tax.

despite some defiant noises from the larger players, and their share prices are thought to reflect its impact.

Labour's manifesto promised "a windfall levy on the excess profits of the privatised utilities to fund a welfare to work programme". But what are "excess" and "ntility? The regulators of the privatised industries capped prices not profits, so there is no clearlydefined yardstick.

Valeric Homer, technical and regulatory director of the Water Companies Association, which represents the 19 water only companies of Eng-land and Wales, says: We strongly believe that we should not be included in the windfall tax because the water supply companies have al-ways been in the private

Reflecting the uncertainty, Peter Boulding, development manager at the Centre for the Study of Regulated Industries (CRI), says: "We still don't know whether it will be based on pre-tax profits, operating profits, or profits after tax, or whether it will be calculated on an historical cost basis."

Another variable is the time period over which the tax is calculated, with some conpanies, such as BT and BG. able to argue that they have faced increased competition in recent years. But one telecoms analyst at

he tide is beginning to turn to better deals for savers. For more than two years, many of the UK's biggest banks and building societies have neglected savers in favour of offering great deals to borrowers. The Haifax, for example, the biggest build ing society, pays only 2.45 per cent interest on £1,000 in its instant access account. Many building society savers have been unable to move their money for fear of losing their windfall bonnsen.

However, this week Abbey National and the Bradford & Bingley increased their savings rates in response to last week's 0.25 per cent rise in base rates. Abbey National has also launched a new 90 day account with a high interest rate and a free share dealing facility to coincide with the flotation of the Halifax The Halifax is also planning to increase its savings rates, but has not yet disclosed the extent of any increase. Bradford & Bingley, one of the few remaining societies committed to mutuality, increased savings rates on its accounts by between 0.2 and 0.8 per cent, to take effect from May 18. The rate on its postal instant access account, for instance, is rising by 0.8 per cent. Those with £1,000 to invest will now get 5.6 per cent interest, and £25,000 will earn 6.15 per cent. Rates on the 30-day notice account have been increased by 0.65 per cent — rates now vary between 5.75 per cent and 6.3 per cent. The society has also increased the rates on its tax-exempt special savings account (Tessa) 0.25 per cent, to 7 per cent.

The new Abbey National account, Investor 90, will offer an annual interest rate of between 4.4 and 6.55 per cent. Abbey is guaranteeing to increase the rate by at least as much as any base rate rise, within ten working days of a rise. Abbey will pay an extra I per cent to those who open one of these accounts before the end of July. The free dealing offer is available only to investor 90 savers selling Halifax or Alliance & Leicester shares. Abbey has also lifted investor 30 interest by 0.3 per cent.

Continental drift

his week saw yet another recordbreaking performance from the UK market, and again continental exchanges have been left trailing in its wake. The FT-SE 100 peaked at a record 4.718.7, compared with a much less spectacular high of 2.317.69 on the FT-SE Eurotrack index. For the UK investor this offers little incentive to buy across the Channel. But behind the headlines and the records, some analysts and fond panagers believe European investments could be the next to take off.

Many European unit and investment tusts are aiready performing better than eonomic circumstances would indicate. In the date of the top 20 Personal equity plan dalifying unit trusts over the past five yars are specialist European funds.

This is an impressive statistic considering that Europe has been in the grip of ression for much of the period, and it aggests that the emerging recovery in livrope could bring strong gains for ivestors. Since the disruption of Gerivestors. Since the disruption of Geran reunification and the ERM crisis unged Europe into a slump after 1992, lost continental countries have been lagued by high unemployment and low routh rates.

Last year average GDP growth for uropean states was 1.6 per cent. This impares badly with the UK's projected rowth rate of 2.8 per cent and the US 5.6 er cent in the first quarter of this year. Serman unemployment is 11.3 per cent, and in France it is 12.5 per cent. European ands have succeeded in spite of these roblems because of several factors lirstly. European interest rates are enerally low, since the "Maastricht iteria," which must be satisfied before

countries can take part in monetary union, put a limit on rate increases.

Low interest rates create poor bond yields, so European investors are now moving away from their traditional pre-occupation with bonds and buying equities instead. This means that stock markets are strong even in the depths of recession, and should be in the process of growing stronger. In addition, European currencies are now cheap relative to the dollar, so exported goods are less expensive to buy abroad. This has given a boost to industries which rely on exports.

From the fund manager's point of view, Europe also offers good opportunities for those with a talent for selecting stocks. Continental companies are often less streamlined than those in the UK, which means that efficiency drives can bring strong boosts to profits. Fund managers such as Talai Shakerchi, the maverick stockpicker of Old Mutual, have built their success on identifying nave bink their success our intentitying companies about to restructure.

Now that European GDP growth is beginning to pick up—the International Monetary Fund predicts that it will reach 2.4 per cent this year and 2.8 per cent in 1996—the advantages of the European market should gel into strong returns, according to Roger Guy, manager of Gartmore's European Select Opportunities Fund. "We are very positive about the prospects for Europe," he said. "The whole culture is changing on the Continent. Companies like Volkswagen have cut their costs enormously, and both institutional and private investors are becoming much more focused on equities. The European business cycle is lagging about 2 years behind the US and UK, so it could be a good time to invest."

George Magnus, a leading analyst at UBS, believes there could be an upward correction of 10 per cent in European equities over the next year. Because Europe is at a less ripe stage in its recovery, inflationary pressures are much less of a threat than they are in the US and in the UK. Figures released this week show European Inflation at just 1.7 per cent in March.

hrissie Keen of Fidelity is more cautious, but also claims that European prospects are good. "We are expecting a modest recovery, and though there could be some volatility if there are delays in monetary union, such a big market offers plenty of opportunities." she said

A further advantage of European unit and investment trusts is that most qualify for inclusion in a Pep. As long as over 50 per cent of a fund's holdings are in European Union countries, it can be placed in a tax-efficient Pep wrapper. You can invest up to £9,000 per year tax-free in Peps.

The report found that most lenders calculate interest charges on the capital owed at the beginning of each year. This means that on repayment mortgages they fail to reduce the interest charges as the capital sum is paid off a rate averaging 7.24 per cent.

omebuyers will pay £73 billion in daily. It claims that this mortgage is one of the "unnecessary and excessive" interest few which gives customers full value for their repayments.

"Interest does not have to be calculated yearly," said Chris Herbert of Yorkshire Bank. Those lenders who follow this practice are effectively receiving a 12-month interest-free loan each year from their customers." Other lenders who calculate interest daily include Citibank, Birmingham Midshires, Barclays and Natwest.

The Yorkshire also found that a third of mortgage account holders had no idea when they were due to pay off their mortgage entirely, 56 per cent did not know their monthly repayments, and 20 per cent believed the mortgage term is always 25 years.

incur minister's wrath on rates

igel Griffiths, Minis-ter for Consumer Af-fairs, launched an outspoken attack on all lenders this week, warning them to clean up their act or face tough new laws within the next few

In an exclusive interview with The Times, Mr Griffiths condemned banks and building societies for concealing the true costs of low-start and discount loans. He is waiting to see what the mortgage lenders' new voluntary code, which begins in July, will entail, but may well demand

However, Mr Griffiths reserved his particular ire for lenders who operate off the high street and charge poor people exorbitantly high rates of interest on their loans. "We take a dim view of people on low income being exploited by lenders." Companies that operate in this market (which could include City Mortgage Corporation, Provident Financial and Cattles) had been put "under review", he said.

The minister's intervention is particulary welcome for borrowers from CMC, who have begun to see the tide swing in their favour after suffering years of punitive charges followed up by aggressive legal action. The company has become notorious for trapping borrowers with dual interest rates which start low but are doubled at the slightest delay in payment.

It has also inflicted huge redemption penalties on bor-rowers wishing to pay off their loans early using an obscure part of the Consumer Credit Act called rule 78.

Last week, three months after John Bridgeman, DirecFair Trading, threatened to remove CMC's credit licence, rule 78 from August. The company says it is now in "constructive dialogue" with the OFT on the rest of its

This will hopefully lead to more changes at the US lend-er, particularly as Mr Griffiths is planning to strengthen the powers of the OFT when dealing with controversial lenders.

However, CMC's partial climbdown has only stiffened borrowers' resolve to fight on through the courts. Last month they formed the CMC Victims Association (CMCVA). Carol Riley, its national organiser, welcomed the move but wants the company to compensate borrowers who have paid the excessive redemption penalties in the past. She also wants CMC to stop its use of dual interest rates. The company entices borrowers with a discount rate of up to 9 per cent but doubles this to an 18 per cent "stan-dard" rate if there is the slightest delay in payment. Although it claims to take a sympathetic line with borrowers who run into trouble, it has initiated more than 1,200 court proceedings in just two years. This is a huge tally for a company which has 30,000

CMC defends itself by saying it provides a service to people who cannot borrow on the high street. It points out that its customer care service booklet, which all borrowers are required to sign, high-lights the fact that its interest rates are high. However, al-

Woolwich lets children down

From Mr.C. Johnson Sir. Some children will be getting nothing at all from the Woolwich float, not even the cash borus, even worse than your article (Let down in payout, April 26). My sevenyear-old is young enough to have my wife as trustee on her account. All she did was put her birthday money in her account, taking it over £100. As she had less than £100 on the first date she doesn't get shares, but as she had more than £100 on the second, she got a vote - and if you have a vote, you don't get the bonus. Repeated complaints to the Woodwich about the sheet injustice of this brought nothing but policy restatements: What kind of financial institution fines a seven year old for saving her birthday money? Yours faithfully, CLIVE JOHNSON, 146 Wardown Crescent, Luton, Bedfordshire

Tax plea

From Mr M.H. Legge
Sir. It is to be hoped that not too many taypayers, who are expected to swell the contents of the Treasury's coffers by the payment of fines and penalties, will come from the ranks of those whose education and experience has failed to equip them with the knowledge and ability to complete the selfassessment forms.

A number of my friends are caught in this net, because they have a small occupational pension and a small amount of income from small sayings. On the one hand, the aggregate income in each case is far too low to meet, or to justify, the fees of a professional adviser and on the other hand, they find the forms utterly baffling. There ought to be a policy of lemence, at least for the first year. Yours faithfully, MICHAEL LEGGE, Culland Cottage, Brailsford, Derbyshire.

Tax credit cut equals 1p on income tax

From Mr M. C. Fitzpatrick Six, Various organisations and business leaders have voiced concerns regarding the possibility of the new Government cutting the rate of dividend tax credit (DTC). You may be interested in how these concerns translate into hard Currently, the rate of DTC of 20 per cent is calculated on the gross dividend. Thus a cash dividend of £80 carries a DIFC of £20, the dividend is. regarded for tax purposes as a gross dividend of £100 fie £80 cash plus £20 DTC).

Currently, basic-rate tax-payers pay tax at 20 per cent on dividend income, this tax liability is satisfied by the DTC. Non-taxpayers can re- tributions; the resulting hightain the DTC in cash from the er contribution would be equi-

Double blow

From Mr F.J. Sharples Sir. Is it not an iniquity to treat the small investor as does the London Stock Exchange? Not only is he held responsible for certificates or vouchers going astray in the post but when the system fails he is fined and charged for a letter of indemnity. Recently, I disposed of a small holding of Manchester United shares sending in my original certificate of fifty shares which on recapitalisation converted to 250 shares. The additional certificate for two hundred shares went astray in the post, but I assumed that the original certificate was adequate proof of my holding. On selling, the London Stock Exchange not only charged me £17.62 for the letter of indemnity but fined me £20 for falling to produce it. How can they justify this? Yours faithfully, F. ed that, the Government might cut the DTC rate to 15 per cent and basic-rate taxpayers would then pay income tax at 15 per cent on dividend income.

The Institute for Fiscal Studies has calculated that this would raise £2 billion pa. There follows an analysis of the victims of such a move. Charities would lose about E50 million per annum in reduced cash reclaims from

Pension funds would lose about £1.4 billion pa in reduced reclaims. At the very least, it seems likely that this shortfall would be made up from increased member convalent to raising the basic rate of income tax (UK wide) by nearly a penny in the pound. Higher-rate taxpayers currently pay higher-rate tax of £20 on an £80 cash dividend. With the DTC reduced to 15 per cent, they would pay £23.50 on each £80 cash dividend, raising £350 million pa for the Treasury.

Currently, a Pep reclaims £20 from the Revenue for each £80 dividend received from its UK equity investments. This reclaim would drop to about £14, costing Peps a sum approaching £100 million pa. The three million or so holders of Peps would each lose about £30 pa on average.

Finally, individual non-taxpayers and certain overseas

(in aggregate) reclaim about £100 million less from the Revenue each year.

The Conservatives were the first to instigate a reduction in the rate of DTC, when Chancellor Lamont reduced it from 25 per cent to 20 per cent in 1993. The Government might be tempted to reduce it still further, in the belief that such a move represents a victimless tax increase. Any budding Chancellor who has read this letter will by now have a clearer idea precisely who the victims are.

Yours faithfully, MAURICE FITZPATRICK, Senior Tax Consultant, Chantrey Vellacott Chartered Accountants, Russell Square House, 10-12 Russell Square, WC).

Widows deserve dignity in old age

From Mrs E. Marshall Sir, I was very interested in reading Jenny Grove's report (Service pension rules add to widows distress, April 26). My husband died in 1995 after 50 years of marriage. He joined the Navy in 1935, serving 35 years, promoted to Lieutenant/Commander. He was always disappointed that on his death I would only be granted a third of his pension!

We all want to provide for ourselves, so we can spend the last years in our own homes. A realisation is also called for that the discussion about the elderly widows should not be conducted solely in economic and financial terms. The elderly have their own specific and peculiar problems. Making them feel as if they are a burden is equal to giving them a shove towards a desperate end! It is miserly repayment for the efforts they made when they were able to. They should be given more dignity, and would be of far more use to the society they helped to build if their experience and capabilities were used.

The Government — after years of not giving a fig for how its attitude towards "Armed Forces Pensions" and their families was affecting the situation - has decided that realistic thinking is overdue. A victory for $2,000 elderly widows who still only receive a third-rate pension would do much for the next Prime Minister's image. Yours faithfully.

Shareholders could give 10% of their windfalls to charity

From Mr D.B. Mackenzie Sir. We are being courted with advice on how to invest the building society windfall payouts. On demutualisation this year, four building societies will create 16 million new small shareholders with 420 billion to invest. It seems an ideal opportunity for hard pressed charities to become beneficiaries.

If 10 per cent of the new shareholders were to donate 10 per cent of their windfall to charity this would result in a massive golden egg of £200 million to charity funds. Demutualisation windfalls only come once so now is the time for benevolence. Yours faithfully, DAVID MACKENZIE, Hillhouse, Stewarton.

Income charm of discounted trusts

From Mr M.W.F. Jenkin

Sir, In your article (Raiders sail in as investment trusts hit the doldrums, April 26) you failed to mention a certain advantage obtained whenever you buy an investment trust at a discount, namely that you obtain the whole income on the portfolio assets, though you are buying those assets cheap; the greater the discount, the greater the enhancement to the immediate and future (growing) income return. Yours faithfully, M. JENKIN.

Sir, I received a letter from Lloyds Bank inviting me to top-up my Pep for this tax year. The personal details section of the application form gives my date of birth as 10.01.1841. Do you think I should ask Buckingham Pa-lace why during the past 56 years I have received not a single telegram recognising my longevity, and Social Security why my state pen-sion, granted in 1992 was not back-dated to 1906? Yours faithfully, 17 Woodfield Lane, Ashtead, Surrey.

Investor hurt by shortfall was unaware of cut in final bonus

From Mr.A. W. Curbishley

Sir, Mr S. M. Gold (Unfriendly move, Weekend Money Letters, April 26) has my sympathy. I too am a victim of Friends Provident, having suffered an imreasonable shortfall of £744 on the maturity value of a modest £20 a month ten-year endowment (originally with UK Provident) which matured in June 1995.

Friends Provident's defence is that investment conditions had-been-very-bad-over-thecase I should have been aware of UK Provident's problems and that of the merger. However, I was totally un-aware that Friends Provident would slash the projected ter-minal bonus by 50 per cent. The reality is that Friends Provident has had the use of my premiums over a ten-year period and, taking account of the inflationary effect on money, simply returned my premiums to me.

If I have been disappointed over the policy return, then so must many hundreds of UK Provident members who entered their contracts in good faith at that time. Yours faithfully, A. CURBISHLEY, 35 Kilburn Road. Hartburn,

Don't be shy of retiring. Boost your company pension now.

No matter when you plan to retire you will want to be able to enjoy life. But will your company pension allow you to do all that you would like?

To receive the maximum pension available you would typically have to be part of the same company pension scheme for 40 years. Moreover, if you have changed your job, even once, it could dramatically reduce your pension.

Topping up your company pension with an Equipable Free-Standing Additional Voluntary Contributions Scheme can help make up the difference so that you can afford to enjoy life when you have more time to do so.

You are eligible for tax relief at the highest rate you pay. Remember that the value of tax relief available will depend on individual circumstances and current legislation can change in

Whitaker romps to victory on his third string

EQUESTRIANISM

BY JENNY MACARTHUR

JOHN WHITAKER, who asked to be excused from the Great Britain team for the Nations' Cup tomorrw in order to rest Welham and Grannusch, his two World Cup horses, achieved a notable win with his third-string horse, Virtual Village Randi, in the Land Rover Great Park Stakes at the Royal Windsor Horse Show yesterday.

The ten-lence course — bigger than the average speed class - prompted mistakes from several leading riders, including Whitaker's younger brother, Michael, a winner on brother, Michael, a winner on the opening day, who had four faults on Virtual Village Baltimoor at fence eight. By the time that John Whitaker going 32nd out of the 40 starters — entered the ring, Bert Romp, a member of Holland's 1992 Olympic gold medal-winning team, on Burg's Mr Blue, was in the lead, with a time of 56.29sec. With his sights set on the Land Rover car on offer for the show's leading rider. Whitaker - already the winner of four cars since November set about the course as though his life depended on it. Randi, with his white mane flying in the wind, hurtled round, appearing to adjust himself automatically in front of the fences. They finished in 54.82sec,

1.47sec faster than Romp. "I knew the course would. suit him." Whitaker said. "It was quite big for an ordinary speed horse to cope with, but Randi can do grands prix as well as speed classes and he is a very careful horse."

When Whitaker bought the Hungarian-bred stallion three years ago, he had hoped he would prove a replacement for the legendary Milton. Although he has not turned out to be as good as Whitaker had anticipated, he is a more than capable all-rounder and has been a prolific winner on the county show circuit. He is also a working stallion, covering around 30 mares a year. Later, in brilliant sunlight, the main arena was treated to a spectacular display of jump-ing from Rob Hoekstra, on Lionel, his American thoroughbred, as they won the Hildon Six Bar. Hoekstra, from Speldhurst near Tunbridge Wells, was the only and final round, when the last ience stood at 6ft.

Robert Smith, a member of the British team for the Nations' Cup event, was the only other rider to reach the last round. He cleared the final fence, but hit the second on Senator Mighty Blue, his puis-

The British team, Nations' Cup winners for the past two years, will have their work cut out if they are to win again tomorrow. Both Holland and Ireland — the latter led by Peter Charles, the European champion, on La ina — are fielding strong teams. Britain, in the absence of John Whitaker, will rely heavily on Geoff Billington, on It's Ono, whose double-clear round last year helped secure victory.

George Bowman, seeking an eleventh win in the Harrods Driving Grand Prix. has taken the overnight lead after a well-judged dressage test with his team of Cumberland Cobs. The one-time scrap metal merchant lies just under four points ahead of Ysbrand Chardon, the former world champion from Holland, with his team of Dutch geldings.

With Felix Brasseur, the reigning world champion, of Belgium, a point behind in third place, Bowman cannot afford a mistake as the competition moves on to today's marathon phase, the most influential part of the event.

best rugby union players leave this weekend on tours that, though they may differ in immediate standing, are of substantial long-term signifi-cance. The British Isles take 18 Englishmen in their 35-strong party to South Africa this evening, while the other 30 leave for Argentina tomorrow with an England squad that is expected to provide several of the 1999 World Cup team.

At least the Lions have a week in which to acclimatise before beginning their demanding 13-match schedule, against an Eastern Province selection in Port Elizabeth. England will no sooner have touched the ground in Buenes Aires than they will be on their way to Cordoba for their first match against the local provincial XV on Wednesday.

There are few more demanding countries than Argentina for developing forwards to cut their teeth: not only are the local forwards phsyically strong, but they play in a raucous, passionate environment in which cool heads will be at a premium. In such a context, the likes of

with the international cap that has so often seemed within his grasp over the past three years, although the competition in the back row will be substantial. Yet it will be essential for the England management to mould a new and effective tight five because that is where Argentina have traditionally excelled; given that six of England's best locks are absent, either in South Africa or injured, the training over the past week has been vital.

This is also the tour on which Alex King may emerge as a strong international contender. The Waspi stand-off half has enjoyed a wonderful

Law sweeps to final of Hoya Cup

CHRIS LAW, of Great Brit-ain, sailing with Andy Hemmings, James Stagg and Julian Salter, put on a master-ly display of match racing yesterday to progress smoothto the final of the Hoya Royal Lymington Cup today (Edward Gorman writes).

Law, faced with his toughest opponent of the week in Bertrand Pace, of France, a former world champion. overcame him with a slick and inventive performance to win 3-0. Law's opponent today is Morten Henriksen, of Denmark, who beat Peter Holmberg, of the US Virgin Islands, 3-0 in the other semifinal

Law rates his crew the best he has raced with. In the opening round-robins, he lost only one of his seven matches before overwhelming Andy Green, of Britain, 30 in the quarter-finals.

Yesterday, the issue was probably settled in a very tight first race, which was sailed in a light breeze right underneath the battlements of Hurst Castle and out of the

Let Warne put the fizz into your summer

FREE champagne! Yes, once again it is time for this column's favourite intro and once again a chance to win a bottle of its house champagne, the ambrosial Nicolas Feuil-

The task I demand of you is simplicity, or complexity, it-self: predict how many Test match wickets Shane Warne will take this summer. Here is some form for your guidance Warne took 34 wickers, starting with That Ball — his first in Test match cricket in England, with which he bowled the frankly disbelieving Mike Gatting — when he took part in the Ashes series of 1993. He is 26, with 240 Test wickets to his name at an average of 23.94. He has had an operation on his spinning finger, the most famous single digit in world sport. He says he is in the best form of his life, but then he always does.

His favourite bunny, or serial victim, in Test cricket is Michael Atherton, the England captain; he has dismissed Atherton six times. Atherton shares this honour with Graham Gooch, his predecessor as England captain. The record for the number of Test wickets taken by an Austra-lian in England is held by Terry Alderman with 42. Seeing that the year of this triumph was 1981, I would be happy to see Warne achieve the same total, in exchange for the same result in the series. Send in your predictions now: the competition closes when the first Test match ball fizzes from Warne's hand.

☐ This column traditionally fights shy of misprint stories. on the general there-but-forthe grace of God principle. But I can resist anything except temptation, so here is a press release from Bonhams about an auction of pictures, including one of ladies at play. #### Shop soiled

I do love a good marathon story — and there is no cheat like an old cheat, that's what I say. John and Suzanne Murphy, aged 61 and 59, broke all kinds of records when they took part in the Boston Marathon recently. Their times rocketed them into the all-time elite category of aged runners. However, and inevitably, they took a short cut. Unwisely, they used a shopping maul - I believe that is the correct spelling — for their ploy. Not discreet: shopping mauls are copiously big-brothered with surveillance cameras and there on videolape were the naughty old pair joggin' on through. I believe it is called growing old disgracefully.

Girl power

A Cup Final is never complete without loony, ambition-crazed dads betting that their baby boys will play in a Cup Final. In the face of such macho posturing, I would like to salute the triumph of the daughter: the emergence of the starlet, Garrinchina. This is the cognomen of Livia Olivera dos Santos, daughter of Garrincha, the great Brazilian footballer. Garrincha had seven daughters by his first wife, whom he left for a cabaret singer. Garrinchina was the eighth daughter, the fruit of Garrincha's last love. Vanderleia Oliveira. Garrinchina is 16 and has just made her debut as a professional footballer with Vasco da Gama. Like her father, she plays on the right wing. Garrincha, weakened by alchoholism, died when Garrinchina was two. Just before he died, he told the girl's mother: "She will be a

Banned band

Football is the world's game, the most democratic and populist sport on earth. Why then, do they keep preventing people from playing it? Banned player one: Raj Thapar, 13, of West Orange, United States. Reason for ban: wearing a patka, as worn by such great athletes as Bishen Bedi. Thapar had played for his team all season, but this time, the referee, Al Scarmato, said he couldn't take the field in his natka. His team lost 2-0. The referee this being the United States, was fearful of legal action. "If he's afraid of being sued, he shouldn't be a referee," a spokesman for the local FA said. The match will be replayed. Banned player two: Megan McKenna, a Canadian playing in New Zealand. Reason for ban: sex. Or rather gender. She is a woman. Fifa itself has banned her for this terrible crime: she can longer play football for her university. The commonsense of the issue has been lost," Mckenna said. She is taking her case to the New Zealand Human Rights Commission.

Surrey only delay the inevitable

BY BARNEY SPENDER

THE OVAL (third day of four): Gloucestershire (24pts) beat Surrey (4) by nine wickets

AT LAST, Surrey produced some applied and disciplined cricket. Alas, it came when the game was all but up and provided no more than a temporary glitch in Gloucestershire's march to an impressive victory inside three days. The win confirms their status as early county championship

Fittingly, it was their cap-tain, Mark Alleyne, who hustled them to victory, taking six of the seven Surrey wickets to fall and finishing with careerbest figures of six for 64.

Starting the day on 59 for three in their second innings. and under a grey sky to match their position. Surrey desper-ately needed a good showing from their remaining batsmen to get near the 256 that they required to make Gloucestershire bat again.

Thanks largely to Graham Thorpe, who stuck around for nearly five hours for his 81, they escaped an innings defeat, but, despite the removal of Trainor for nought, Wright and Cunliffe knocked off the 14 runs needed in time to enjoy well-deserved

Thorpe, who seems certain to figure in the England Texaco Tropy squad to be announced tomorrow, never looked entirely at home, especially against the off spin of Ball. He kept his head down, however, changed his gloves with Gooch-like regularity and bashed the odd bad ball

He had good support from Shahid, Ratcliffe and Ben Hollicake, but, in the end, the controlled and patient Gloucestershire bowling ac-counted for each of them. Alleyne, bowling his briskish medium pace, came away with the rewards, but he benefited from the work of his colleagues, most notably Bail

Ball, who has been a long time establishing himself in county cricket, bowled a delightful spell of off spin and might easily have had three or four wickets. He worked an excellent leg-side stumping for Russell to remove Ratcliffe and had both Thorpe and Ben Hollioake playing at thin air more than once. Smith, meanwhile, failed to add to Stewart's wicket on Thursday, but was a constant thorn with his left-arm swing.

After conceding 11 off his first over, Smith had a fine opening spell, conceding just a single from his next five overs. while Lawrence huffed and puffed at the other end. It took an hour and a quarter before the initial breakthrough came, however, when Shahid drove at Alleyne and edged to

Russell When Alleyne rapped Adam Hollioake on the pads four overs later, it looked a dead game. Then Ratcliffe joined Thorpe and produced the composed kind of innings that suggested Surrey might do well to use him on a more regular basis than they did last year. They added 83 together before Ball dismissed

Ratcliffe for a positive 45. Ben Hollioake played one textbook cover drive off Alleyne, but the Gloucestershire captain, finding enough swing to keep the batsmen on their toes, tempted him into one drive too many and Ball caught a low chance at first slip. Three balls later. Thorpe's patient innings ended larnely when he clipped Alleyne straight to Cunliffe at

Martin Bicknell and Tudor saved the innings defeat, but Alleyne plugged away to wrap up the innings. In the end, it was a triumph for teamwork and discipline, although Allevne, in his first season as captain, has no illusions about the county's present standing.

"In the last couple of seasons, we have made a good start and then fallen away, so the real test for us is to see if we can stay there," he said. "There are a lot of other teams out there playing

TAUNTON (third day of four): Sussex, with seven second-innings wickets in hand, are 26 runs behind Somerset

BILL ATHEY is rather old to be doing impersonations of a boy standing on a burning deck, but that is the role that springs to mind watching him bat for Sussex this season. The club's new vice-captain is selling his wicket more dearly than ever and his unbeaten 70 in 31 hours yesterday - along with rain stoppages that re-duced play by half - has kept Athey's approach was not exclusively defensive. Whenever Somerset pitched short, he pounced on the opportunity with alacrity and, once he had negotiated the first hour. played with some freedom. The cover-drive to the boundary off Parsons that brought up his half-century took him past 25,000 runs in his career, a milestone also achieved only by Gooch, Gatting, Hick and Robinson among contemporaries. Somerset were made to work hard for their few successes, the overcast skies singularly failing to encourage the ball to swing. Shine prodispatch Moores, Rose brought one back to have Greenfield leg-before offering no stroke and Taylor was extracted by Mushtaq, caught at slip essaying a drive.

Once again, Caddick bowled well without luck and without a wicket. Before tea, he gave it everything in an effort to chip out Athey, but to no avail. The changeable weather may come to Sussex's assistance again today and its interference may be Athey's best chance of watching Middlesbrough - his beloved native city - play in the Cup

Yorkshire foiled ... as Brown digs in

EDGBASTON (third day of four): Warwickshire (20pts) beat Yorkshire (5) by four from a position bordering on the hopeless to record their first championship success of the season yesterday in a manner suggesting that plenty more will follow.

On a pitch on which 33 wickets had fallen on the first two days, they recovered from 94 for five to achieve their target of 248 to beat Yorkshire for the loss of just one more wicker. When it mattered most, Yorkshire bowled carelessly the indefatigable Gough a notable exception - while their outfielding became shoddy.

Nobody epitomised Warwickshire's resolve more ably. than Dougie Brown. His innings, lasting for almost three hours, was an odyssey in itself: When eight, he was dropped by Vaughan; eight runs later, he was struck on the hand by a rearing ball from White. Having reached 56, he was hit for a second time, on the forearm by Gough. Two balls later, Silverwood spilt a chance at long leg and was duly pun-ished in the following over when Brown whipped successive deliveries through the leg side to seal the game.

Having reached the boundary for the eleventh time in all. Brown looked towards the dressing-room and punched the air in jubilation. Among those mirroring his grin was Trevor Penney, perhaps thankful that his services were not required for a second time.

BY IVO TENNANT

SOUTHAMPTON (third day of four): Leicestershire, with all second-innings wickets in hand, need 88 runs to beat

LEICESTERSHIRE are starting to perform in the proper manner of county champions. The resume today needing 88 runs to win and are already anticipating their first championship victory of bowled out for 182 yesterday and, however unfortunate they felt they were with one or two umpiring decisions, that quite simply represented poor

There were no pyrotechnics in Hampshire's innings. Those that did occur came. once again, from Millns, who pulled Bovill for six in the course of reaching the highest score of his career. Having completed a century over-night, he finished with an unbeaten 114, including nine fours and two sixes.

Millns and Brimson added 76 for the last Leicestershire wicket, which was considerably more than any partnership in Hampshire's second innings. The pitch was taking spin and the ball swung when the atmosphere was heavy in the morning, but this was the batting of what is, at present, an ordinary side. Hayden or Smith, preferably both, will have to carry it this season.

Hayden has to come to terms with having been omitted from the Australia touring party. In six innings, he has made 93 runs and that is not enough. In the brief time be was at the crease yesterday, he was hit on the pads too regularly for such a proven player. Millns had him legbefore, albeit when he was someway forward.

Nobody, other than Maru, stayed for long. Pierson took four wickets, all through catches close the but. The ball with which he had Smith taken at leg slip turned sufficleatly to tatch the inside edge. The quicker bowlers were not played with any conviction either. White and Udal were caught at the wicket and only a stand of 44 between Maru and Renshaw ensured that a fourth day

Derbyshire waste fine opportunity won by Malcolm

LORD'S (third day of four): Middlesex (20pts) beat Derbyshire (4) by 131 runs

GIVEN a golden opportunity to win this match by another fine display of fast bowling by Devon Malcolm, Derbyshire's batsmen failed disappointingly to rise to the challenge of scoring the 231 runs they needed to beat Middlesex.

Johnson and Kallis bowled well at them, but misjudgments were rife in the way that Derbyshire set about a task that should have been within their compass, despite the continued absence of Kim

In the final analysis, it was Keith Brown who won this match for Middlesex when, not for the first time, he resisted all-comers while others were vanquished. Derbyshire needed someone like him. As it was, they applied themselves indifferently on a pitch that aided good seam bowling, but warranted no such collapse as to be all out for 99 in fewer than 36 overs.

Thus another fine piece of bowling by Malcolm, which earned him six for 75, was wasted. Malcolm is in prime form. When he was bowling. the game took on a different aspect. Batsmen were hurried into the stroke. Even Brown, who had looked comfortable throughout against everybody clse, had his moments of uncertainty along the line of the off stump and just outside

Universities deserve positive approach

BY RUPERT COX

FENNER'S (final day of three): Cambridge University drew with Northamptonshire

IF THIS fixture had not already been rendered academic, two rain stoppages on the second evening and a further 50-minute delay yesterday morning ensured that it was so. Much as a football team leading by two goals will play keep-ball near the corner flag, Northamptonshire clung. doggedly to their batting time in assembling a first-innings lead of 87, after more than seven hours batting. These matches deserve a more positive approach from counties., . Here, the teams went through the motions, awaiting the advent of the thunder and lightning that had been fore. cast. Both teams, though, will face a more rigid examination today, in the form of a one-day University contest for the Johnson Fry Trophy at Fenner's while a more potent Northamptonshire team, without the injured

Rob Bailey, 88 not out overnight, duly completed his fortieth first-class century, but sadly for those looking forward to an onslaught, he preferred to sacrifice his wicket, perishing graciously after a 155-ball stay with two mes advanced to Robin Jones's off-

His benevolence did, however, permit the middle order to benefit from time at the crease, with the left-handed Tony Penberthy compiling a half-century, followed by more robust contributions from Alan Fordham and David

Ripley.

Breifly, the visitors' declaration presented the students with an incisive spell from John Hughes, who accounted for Quentin Hughes and Mark Dawson with only 14 on the board - Dawson's duck giving him a run of five successive noughts.

set Derbyshire as many as 241 to win. The early loss of Kallis was a severe blow and, although Pooley played handsomely enough until just before lunch, the interval came with Middlesex five men out and only 138 ahead.

While wickets continued to fall at the other end, Brown took every opportunity to score. When he was last out, beautifully caught behind off the inevitable Malcolm, he had made 76 of the 92 added for the last five wickets, and batted for 34 hours and, with careful selection, had picked off nine fours and a six.

As for Derbyshire's batting, it was something Dean Jones, their fortheight captain, may well have words about. Gul Khan will want to forget the rush of blood that saw him charge Weekes shortly before tea, after he and Rollins had een off the new ball. The promising Adams wafted and was caught at slip. A good throw from Pooley accounted for Rollins, seeking a dubious single — and the slide was on. At 52 for three, Derbyshire needed to show solid resistance. This they singularly failed to do as Johnson and Kallis bowled and a number of irresponsible strokes hastened a collapse to 80 for six when Jones was legbefore without offering a stroke. In Barnett's absence. that was effectively 80 for seven and there was no need for the extra half-hour.

Atherton pulls for four yesterday before a run-out ended his hopes of a century

Lancashire's gallop fades

BY DEREK HODGSON

OLD TRAFFORD (third day of four): Nottinghamshire, with all second-innings wickets in hand, need 190 runs to

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE are reputed to be calling themselves the Outlaws on Sundays, presumably the con-notation being Sherwood Forest rather than Richmal Crompton, but they could turn out to be the Merry Men this evening if the weather allows them the chance of a rare win on this ground. They lost 21 overs to bad light yesterday evening and the forecast is not Much could depend on their fitness of Tim Robinson, their stalwart anchorman, who had to leave the field towards the end of the Lancashire innings with what appeared to be a cracked left forearm. In fact, it turned out to be no more than severe bruising.

Atherton and Crawley had resumed their partnership of 133 in auspicious circumstances; the pitch seemed docile enough and, if the sunshine was hazy, there was no great evidence of swing. Chris Tolley could not bowl, because of a strained shoulder, and, in normal times, with Lancashire resuming at 133 for one visitors would expect a punishing day in the field.

Neither batsman found the dominant mood of the previous evening. Nottinghamshire gritted their teeth, worked hard at containment and only 45 runs came in 23 overs. The pair's running between the wickets always carried an element of risk and, sure enough, that was how the partnership ended. Crawley cut and Atherton called, but failed to beat the throw from Tolley at short third-man. Crawley sank to his knees as the England captain turned towards the pavilion. Atherton's 68, off 213 balls, should have become the century he took another boundary off the third ball. The whole morning perked up as 60 came in 11 overs and when Crawley departed, to the lively Paul Franks, for his expected century — from 245 balls with 13 fours - Lancashire were into their gallop.

Enter the Enforcer. Graham Lloyd hit the first ball. from Usman Afzaal, straight back for four, almost a six, and

But thereafter, things went awry. Mike Watkinson was trapped before he could swing his long arms. Lloyd fell trying to pull the humble Graeme Archer and after lunch the clouds gathered, the temperature dropped sharply and the became mischievous again. The best batting thereafter came from Neil Fairbrother, who was using a runner because of a strained groin. His valiant 37 included some superbly timed strokes.

Support for him was less impressive, as the last five wickets fell for 51 — and this in an order in which every player has scored a first-class centu-Perhaps the most damaging blow was struck by Peter Martin when he hit Robinson at silly mid-off.

Wells in control as Kent prosper

BY MICHAEL HENDERSON

CANTERBURY [third day of four): Kent, with seven secondinnings wickets in hand, need 163 runs to beat Glamorgan

ALAN WELLS batted quite beautifully last night. Until he went to the crease - with Kent, needing 319, one wicket down to a rampant Wagar Younis - only one player in the match had passed fifty. By the close of play, he was on 84 and Kent's requirement today. 163, is within their compass. Should they get them, it will be a very good victory.

Wells, playing freely on both sides of the wicket, reached his maiden half-century for Kent from 65 balls, adding 64 with Graham Cowdrey for the third wicker. Cowdrey played well, 100, spanking Robert Croft twice through mid-off and running his parmer's runs no less aggressively than his own. They took the fight to Glamorgan, but Cowdrey, caught at slip off Dean Cosker four overs before the close, will not fight again today.

Both sides have played some good cricket in this match, though not necessarily at the same time. Having established a first-innings lead of 125, Glamorgan will consider their performance yesterday to be an opportunity missed. To be bowled out for 193, after the openers made 100, was a pretty thin effort.

There were no demons in the pitch, as Wells showed later. Matthew Fleming must have thought it a least as he picked up four wickets and Paul Strang will not need reminding that county cricket is rarely so bountiful. There were four wickets for him, too, after Adrian Shaw pulled his first ball for six.

Shaw, opening in place of Morris, who turned his ankle on the first day, shared that century stand with James, whose dismissal shortly before lunch was the prelude to a catastrophic afternoon.

Wells cut and pulled with aplomb, but the stroke that made the day was a cover drive that went past the left hand of James at cover. It was a true cover drive, closer to point than extra, and described by a natural arc of the bat. Marvellous.

Fine Law innings completes recovery

By PAT GIBSON

CHELMSFORD (third day of four): Essex, with five second-innings wickets in hand, are 255 runs ahead of Durham

ANY reassurance that England took yesterday from Nasser Hussain's first fifty of the summer yesterday must be tempered by the fact that he did not look in quite the same class as Stuart Law, who could not even get into the Australian tour party.

Law's majestic, unbeaten 81 completed an Essex recovery that could hardly have been more meaningful. Durham had been more than a match for them over the first two days, but they will have to play uncommonly well now if they are to record their first championship victory in two

Durham needed a substantial first innings lead to have a realistic chance and they did not get it, despite the conscientious efforts of Speight, who had laboured for three hours over his 53 when Cowan had him caught at first slip.

Their last five wickets went down for 37 to restrict the lead 10 54, and Gooch and Prichard quickly wiped that out in an opening stand of 77. It might have been different if Killeen had been able to accept a return catch from Prichard off his first ball, because the Essex captain went on to make 80, hitting 14

Gooch had been surprised by a ball from Foster that nipped back and kept low to bowl him off his pads. showing that there was still plenty for the seamers. There was also a hint of turn when Boiling squeezed one through the gate to bowl Prichard.

Durham were depleted, however, by the loss of Brown, their best bowler, who went off after nine overs with a side strain and Hussain was able to launch himself into his first fifty in seven innings. He had reached 67 when he got underneath a hook off Foster and was well caught by Wood, the substitute, running round the long-leg boundary. The rest belonged to Law.

By the close, he had struck it fours and a six, with more, perhaps, to follow.

RACING: WRAGG KEEN FOR SASURU TO EMULATE JUDDMONTE LOCKINGE WINNER'S VICTORIES IN TOP RACES

First Island on rising tide of success

AN EMPHATIC victory by First Island in the Juddmonte Lockinge Stakes at Newbury yesterday left Geoff Wragg with dreams of achieving more group one glory — with another horse in his powerful Newmarket stable. "Sasuru has come on a ton since last year and works with First Island at home and there is nothing between them," the usually reserved trainer said. "Sasuru could be a mile and a half horse."

Sasuru, the impressive winner of the Gordon Richards Stakes at Sandown last month, will tackle group one opposition in the Prix d'Ispahan at Longchamp tomorrow week before possibly tackling the Hardwicke Stakes and King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes, which Wragg won last year with Pentire. Although First Island is even more effective on fast ground, his finishing kick still proved too much for Ali-Royal, who had assumed the lead from Beauchamp King three furlangs out. Even Top plugged on for third while Spinning World, the 6-4 favourite, finished a disappointing fourth and prevented Jonathan Pease from gaining his first British training suc-

If Wragg has any problems juggling the options for his stable stars, he could always seek the advice of Henry Cecil. who is blessed with an embarrassment of riches, especially among the fillies. Having already won the 1,000 Guineas with Sleepytime and seen Reams Of Verse become a short-priced favourite for the Oaks, Cecil yesterday found himself with another Oaks possible when Yashmak won the Vodafone Group Fillies' Trial by nine lengths from Tempting Prospect. She is as short as 5-1 for the Epsom Oaks, but could go for the French equivalent.

The nine-year-old topweight her seasonal reappearance and the Shirley Heights filly was headed inside the final could be an interesting runner furlong by Sharp Consul, only in the Ribblesdale Stakes. The to fight back tenaciously under Frankie Dettori to land same owner-trainer combination had been on the mark

With the sporting focus on Wembley today, there is no televised racing but the Newbury card offers some interesting betting possibilities. Sharp Hat ran a cracker behind Perryston View in a fast-run all-aged handicap at-Newmarket two weeks ago and makes some appeal against his own generation in the Winchester Handicap. The Richard Hannon-trained colt is ideally drawn in stall 13 and. with the easy ground placing the emphasis on stamina, he has strong claims.

John Dunlop's horses are in fine feule and Will You Dance has sound prospects in the London Gold Cup. The Shareef Dancer colt needed every yard of ten furlongs when beating some decent rivals, including Winter Garden, at Pontefract and will appreciate today's step up in trip. Significantly, he looks well treated at the weights when compared to Winter Garden, who was well behind at the Yorshire track and has won since.

Bequeath was not disgraced over an inadequate trip behind Sasuru in group three company three weeks ago and should appreciate the drop in class and step up in distance offered by the Quantel Aston Park Stakes. Persian Punch was not given a hard time behind Time Allowed in the Jockey Club Stakes and represents the main danger. However, the bet of the day is in the Barbara E Maiden Stakes in which Scattergun can make a winning debut The Derby entry has been working well at home and can floor Garuda.

Jukes loses winning chances

POINT-TO-POINT BY CARL EVANS

GRASS, or to be precise silage, has dealt a blow to Wales's hopes of lifting the two national riders' championships. The organisers of today's proposed Ystrad Taf Fechan meeting had to postpone for two weeks after wet weather prevented silage cutting.

Consequently, Jamie
Jukes and Pip Jones, who are in contention for the men's and women's championships, miss out on several winning chances and are to ride at Stratford on the rescheduled date.

Jones, who won on Final Pride at Wednesday's Cothelstone meeting, now heads for the Golden Valley fixture, but one ride on unraced Itsthejonesboy is hardly compensation. Jukes should at least win at the Dulverton West on King Torus.

A double at Cothelstone gave Vickery a lead of one (25-24) over Jones and she has good chances on Tinotops and Billy Barter at the Dulverton West. Both are trained at South Barrow, near Yeovil, by Rose Vickery, Shirley's mother. A victory for Butler John at the meeting would put him level with Grimley Gale in the race for the horse title, although Touch 'N' Pass would join them on seven wins if he is

Hannon eyes Ascot target for Andreyev

ANDREYEV will attempt to provide his trainer, Richard Hannon, with a second Jersey Stakes success at Royal Ascot in three years after winning the listed King Charles II Stakes at Newmarket yesterday. Hannon was responsible for the 1995 winner, Sergeyev.

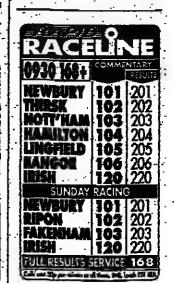

Richard Hughes, riding Andreyey, tracked the pace set by challenge passing the forlong marker to win by three quarters of a length at 3-1. Two lengths adrift in third came Granny's Pet, with John Dun-lop's Shawaf a disappointing 6-4 favourite in fifth. "The plan is for the Jersey at the moment and the way he has done that he would have to take his chance," Sylvester Kirk, Harmon's assistant, said, "He has picked up well and the ground here is ideal for him. It was perfect today." Apprentice Royston Firench, who had the biggest win of his career aboard Incheailloch in the Cesarewitch here in October, rode his second double, and his first on turf, through Welton Arsenal and Janglynyve.

53-1 double in the NGK Spark

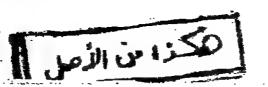

Plugs Rated Stakes to give Bridgwater trainer, Kevin Bishop, a winner with his first runner at the track. An unlucky in-running fourth in the Jubilee Handicap at Kempton earlier in the month, Welton Arsenal also has Royal Ascot. on his agenda. Bishop has earmarked the Royal Hunt

Cup. Firench, who is attached to Luca Cumani's stable, rode his twelfth winner of 1997, and his 27th in all, on Janglynyve in the Equity Financial Collections Claiming Stakes. Sean Woods's chestnut defeated Soura by five lengths.

Mark Flower celebrated his first victory on the Rowley Mile when Soojama and Gary Hind took the Equity Finan-cial Collections Handicap by seven lengths from Sea Freedom. "He's no star but he is honest," Flower said. "I wish I had a stable full of horses like .

RACING: RECENT NEWMARKET WINNER HAS SPEED TO PROFIT FROM FAVOURABLE DRAW

The Dilettanti can make early pace tell

DESPITE the galloping nature of Newbury racecourse, the draw can have a significant impact when the ground is riding soft - as it willtomorrow.

On the round course, a low draw is a considerable advantage, especially in nine-fur-long races such as the Night & Day Handicap (2.30), in which runners reach the first turn in less than a quarter of a mile. The Dilettanti could be ideally. positioned in stall five, especially as the colt possesses plenty of early pace. He was quickly away when making all the running to win by four lengths in a fast time at Newmarket 15 days ago. The impressive victory confirmed The Dilettanti is very much on the upgrade and today's soft ground should hold no terrors for him as he finished an excellent second to. Nash House on similar going on his seasonal debut at the Berkshire course I2 months ago. Wilcuma, a course and distance winner, and Almond Rock both appreciate easy going but they are drawn [] and 13, which could be a big disadvantage.

GOING: GOOD DRAW: 5F-6F, HIGH NUMBERS BEST SIS

TOMORROW'S RACING ON TELEVISION

In contrast to the round track, a high draw is a bonus on the straight course when the going is soft and that could count against the potentially well handicapped Sweet Wil-helmina in the Mail On Sunday Handicap (3.00). This 20-runner handicap looks best left alone for betting purposes and Q Factor, from the inform Derek Haydn Jones yard, is a tentative choice to resume winning ways after being badly hampered at Ascot 18 days ago. ; Samuel Scott has shown improved form since joining. Martin Pipe, notably when pipped by The Butterwick Kid at Nottingham last month. With the winner having gone in again at Chester, the form looks solid and the Shareef Dancer gelding looks sure to give a good account over this onger trip in the opening You Handicap (200).

However, I marginally prefer Al's Alibi, who won a 12mile handicap here on easy ground last April off today's handicap mark of 72. The Willie Muir-trained ronner should appreciate a first attempt at two miles having stayed on behind Fairy Knight az Haydock 13 days ago.

The best bets at Newbury are away from the gaze of the BBC cameras and Pomona makes considerable appeal in the Programme Limited Stakes after an eye-catching reappearance at Sandown recently. She quickened to lead inside the final quarter-mile on the unfavoured side of the track and was eased once beaten. With Pat Eddery booked, she can repay the sympathetic reappearance. Ed Dunlop is enjoying a cracking season and he holds Super Monarch in high regard. The colt has shown promise in the Newmarket maidens won by Yalaietanee and Among Men and looks ready to open his account in the Charles Wintour Maiden Stakes (4.40).

Mannion's magical skills the marvel of Teesside

Mannion: crowd-puller

leven months ago. the nation was in awe when Paul Gascoigne scooped the ball over Colin Hendry, the Scotland centre back, to score a devastating goal in the European championship. Fifty years ago, Wilf Mannion used to lob the ball over an opponent's head and catch it the other side twice in every

This season, people have gazed in admiration at the dexterity of Juninho, the diminutive Brazilian, who has charmed the crowds across the country, though failing to save Middlesbrough from relegation. By comparison, Mannion's touch far outshone even Juninho.

Mannion's transfer value would today rival Alan Shearer's £15 million. In that golden era, immediatly after the war, when the England team boasted five legendary forwards in Matthews, Carter, Lawton, Mannion and Finney, Mannion was, briefly, the most prized of all. At a time when the transfer record was the £20,000 that Sunderland paid for Len Shackleton, Celtic bid £30,000 for him. When Middlesbrough rejected the offer, Celtic put an open cheque book on the table plus two players in part exchange. In his case. However, Mannion returned home to allow his expectant wife to be near her family. On his reappearance for Middlesbrough, perilously close to relegation, the attendance against Preston North End almost trebled.

Middlesbrough refused, threatening to put Mannion out of the game. Like Matthews, he could alone put ten thousand on the gate. Eventually, years ahead of his time in an age of the maximum wage and contract retention, he temporarily went on strike in 1948-49, taking a job out of the game in Oldham.

Mannion was the first great player I saw. As a teenager, I was taken by an uncle to Stamford Bridge, solely with the purpose of exposing me to the magic of this inside forward, who would often make two opponents simultaneously run the wrong way.

As with most sublime players, there was no apparant effort. Ball-control was instanMannion make a sudden sprint, taking two or three opponents with him, only for them to discover that he had left the ball behind. He would then turn and amble back to it.

There was an occasion, against the illustrious Blackpool FA Cup Final team of 1947-48, when Mannion was unusually quixotic: juggling the ball from head to shoulder and back again and, in one instance, running 30 yards with the ball tucked behind his neck. At half-time, George Hardwick - "Gentleman George", who also captained England at left back - asked Mannion what on earth he that he had become engaged that morning, that Bernadette, his fiancee, in the grandstand with her father, had not previously seen a match and he had promised to entertain her. "I'm afraid I was showing off," Mannion admitted. A spry 79 yesterday, he will be there praying for Juninho and the rest tomorrow and for Middlesbrough's first big trophy. There are those who recall that Mannion was a flawed genius. Besides having a footballer's taste for a drink, which accelerated his subsequent decline with Hull City and non-league Cambridge United and Poole Town, at one stage leaving him working on a building site, it was said that he seldom gave his peerless best to his club.

"Why can't you play for us the way you do for England?" Hardwick would repeatedly complain. Mannion gave the impression that he found mere mortals such as the stalwart Jimmy Gordon unresponsive to his creativity. He shone for England and, in his 26 appearances, stored 11 goals, still ranking equal-21st among all-time England scorers.

Making his debut for Mid-dlesbrough at 17 in 1936-37, he was selected by England the next season, when Middles-brough outclassed the leading teams such as Portsmouth, Manchester City and Derby County, Will Gillow, the Middlesbrough manager, refused to release him, saying he was required by the club for a

His best performance was probably in England's exceptional 4-0 victory over Italy in Turin the next year. To this day, that performance ranks as perhaps England's finest abroad. "Stan was incredible." Mannion said, deferentially. Matthews returned the compliment. "Wilf could make the hall talk," he recalled. Today, Mannion hopes that Juninho will do the same and leave

At the other end of Stamford Bridge, alongside what is left of the West Stand, the Matthew Harding Stand rises into a blue sky. There are some who want a Chelsea victory in the Cup Final today to be dedicated to the former director and Bates's bitter rival, who was killed in a helicopter crash last year.

Blinded by sentiment, many still see Harding as Chelsea's lost saviour, the man responsible for starting the club's march back towards the top, a warmer, gentler antidote to his gruff, blunt, bearded enemy who has so often been cast as the villain of the piece.

GOLF: LEADER HOLDS NERVE AT ENGLISH OPEN IN ATTEMPT TO SECURE BREAKTHROUGH VICTORY

Chapman keeps mind on the present

GOLF CORRESPONDENT

A HANDSOME new course record of 63, by Jay Townsend, rounds of 64 by Darren Clarke, Lee Westwood and José Coceres, a 65 by Dennis Ediund and a collection of 66s, including one by Steve Webster, proved that the Hanbury Manor course could yield to good golf in the second round of the Alamo English Open

The score that mattered though, was that of Roger Chapman, the Englishman who led after a 66 in the first round and is attempting to rid himself of the tag of being one of the best players never to have won an event in Europe in a 16-year professional

Chapman has come second 11 times around the world and one of the consequences of this is that his name is not deeply implanted in the conscious-ness of golf followers. Two speciators were overheard talking to one another as follows: "I see that Colin Chapman's leading again." This came after the day when a radio announcer had referred to him as "the Australian, Roger Chapman"

Chapman arrived at the course knowing that, on such a calm and sunny day, his overnight score of six under par would have been overtaken. There he met Chris Linstead, the sports psychologist with whom he works, who gave him some words of advice. "It's another day," he told Chapman. "Stay in the present. Don't go into the future or the past. Stay focused." Still, to know the course was playing short and to be able to 20 out and take advantage of it are two very different things. Chapman is beginning to feel the cold steel of pressure on his neck, but he responded bravely with another 66 and, at 12 under par, has opened a one-stroke lead over Edlund and two strokes over Webster.

Chapman's second round. included eight birdies and an

Chapman looked in fine shape in securing eight birdies and an eagle during his second round at the Hanbury Manor course yesterday contained five pars and four bogeys indicates how erratic it was, Accuracy is one of the main requirements to overcome this course and Chapman was inaccurate off the tee and drove into the rough on each of the four holes where he ran up bogeys.

His putting was excellent, however, and on the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th his scoring was extraordinary. On the 8th, he drove into the left rough, but hit a three iron 206 yards and holed from 25 feet. On the 9th, and holed an 18-foot putt for his second birdie in a row. The way that Chapman. Tony Johnstone and Wayne Westner played the 10th could provide a quiz question. How did three men take ten strokes on one par-four hole when only one of them putted? Answer: one man. Chapman, holed his second shot: the second man, Johnstone, holed his third shot, from a bunker; while Westner, the third, peared into the hole after one bounce. On the next tee, he hit a magnificent stroke that looked as though it was going to hit the flag. In such a mood, there was bound to be a good chance he would hole the 12-foot putt and he did.

Chapman's five-iron trav-

Webster is one of the conundrums of the PGA European Tour. He was the leading amateur at the 1995 Open and won the Tour school at San Roque that same year. Then it all went wrong. In his first year as a professional, he missed the cut in his first eight tournaments and had to return to the qualifying school, where he finished fourth.

When Webster missed the cut in six of his first seven events on the European Tour this year, but then he came fourth in Italy. He is the sort of player who would benefit from having an experienced campaigner carrying his bag and, in Andy Prodger, who caddied for Nick Faldo in the Eighties, he has someone able to do just that. Prodger deserves some credit for Web-

Slaney on course for world title attempt

MARY SLANEY, of the United States, has two weeks to answer charges that she took a hormone drug to improve her performance at the American Olympic Games trials in June, 1996. Slaney, 38, will continue to run compentively and will race Sonia O'Sullivan, the Ireland athlete, over 3,000 metres at the Prefontaine Classic in Eu-genc. Oregon. on May 25. Even if Slaney does appear at the scheduled hearing, she has the right to two further appeals before a final decision is made. As a result, Slaney, who has made a remarkable comeback to athletics after injuries, will almost certainly not know her fate before the world championships in Athens in August, when she hopes to retire gloriously, 14 years after she took two world titles in Helsinki.

Seeds blossom

Tennis: Goran Ivanisevic, of Croatja, at No 6 the highest seed left in the Italian Open, moved serenely into the semifinals yesterday with a 6-4, 6-4 victory over Scott Draper, the left-handed Australian who had earlier beaten the favourite. Thomas Muster.

Ivanisevic will next meet Alex Correjta, the No 10 seed, from Spain, who dropped the first set against Karim Alami, of Morocco, but took advantage of three controversial line-calls in the second set to progress 4-6, 7-5, 6-3.

Faldo poised

Golf: Nick Faldo, of Great Britain, recorded a 66 to finish two shots off the lead in the Byron Nelson Classic in Irving, Texas, yesterday, Tiger Woods, making his first appearance since winning the Masters, was in a six-strong group on 65 lurking behind the joint-leaders. Paul Stankowski and Dudley Hart.

Wigg's quest

Speedway: Simon Wigg, of King's Lynn, is the most experienced of the four Brit-ish riders who will set out in Prague tonight on their quest to become world champion. The capital of the Czech Republic is hosting the first grand prix of a six-round series that culminates in Denmark in September.

Touring show

Motorsport: The seventh and eighth rounds of the 24-race British touring car championship series at Brands Hatch on Sunday will be the first such events in Britain to be televised live. The BBC has embraced the series in the wake of losing its Formula One coverage to ITV.

RUGBY LEAGUE: CASTLEFORD TURN TO CRITCHLEY IN SEARCH OF REVIVAL

BY CHRISTOPHER IRVINE

THE start of a ten-team Southern Conference league this weekend will give rugby league footholds in such nontraditional areas as Birmingham. Leicester, Worcester, Ipswich and Bedford. Three teams in London and others in Oxford and Cambridge make up the pilot competition.

With financial backing by the Rugby Football League and strong criteria to bring about minimum standards, Lionel Hurst, the chairman of the Conference, sees it as a catalyst for national growth. There is a big following for Super-League across the country. It is a case of converting that interest and putting down roots," he said.

Juninho seeks to lead final dance

By OLIVER HOLT, FOOTBALL CORRESPONDENT

BOBBY ROBSON, the former England manager, has grown fond of comparing footballing matches with dances. England versus Spain in Euro 96 was a paso doble. he said: Barcelona against Real Madrid last Saturday was a violent tango.

Today, others may say the FA Cup Final will be an intoxicating samba, but, in reality, it is destined to be the

It should be a happy dance. an exuberant festival of the best that English club football has to offer, a high-profile head-to-head between the two teams who have pioneered the influx of foreign players into the FA Carling Premiership this season with such contrasting results, a collision of cultures with the oldest of English footballing traditions. If nerves do not paralyse them, if Middlesbrough's misfortunes do not weigh them down, the match should be a treat, a heady, fascinating melange of Gianfranco Zola's romantic brilliance, Mark Hughes's controlled power, Fabrizio Ravanelli's fierce finishing and Juninho's nearirrepressible creative genius. It will, however, be tinged with a rare poignancy, too, for an occasion that usually begins amid uncontained joy. For Chelsea, perhaps, there may be only optimism. excitement about a future that looks brighter, but, for Middlesbrough supporters, it is destined to be a final riddled

For them, it will be an emotional farewell party, a wake for a host of exotic stars club that astonished the football world by enticing them to Teesside in the first place. Middlesbrough's relegation from the Premiership seems certain to rob them of the glamour they so fleetingly glimpsed.

Juninho, their talisman, the player who has given them his heart and soul, who has never denigrated his new home, who has run until he dropped, is the subject of an offer from Atlético Madrid; Ravanelli, more pragmatic, more detached, is being linked with AC Milan; Emerson, the enfant terrible, may join

Juninho in Spain. Wembley, though, and the Cup Final, is the kind of stage that the Middlesbrough trio crave, the sort of platform that brought them to England in the first place. If they are inspired by the atmosphere and spurred on by their impending departures to indulge in a final fling, Middlesbrough may salvage some-thing from their season.

The Chelsea manager Ruud Gullit, is unlikely to try to shackle Juninho with a did so effectively during the Coca-Cola Cup final and its replay, when they detailed the dogged Pontus Kaamark to be the Brazilian's shadow. Emerson played so poorly in the fateful last league game of the season at Elland Road that Bryan Robson, the Middiesbrough manager, substituted him, but he, too, is a player of rare talent, a surging midfield dynamo who has been stung by moves to make him a scapegoat for the team's failures this season.

If Ravanelli has recovered sufficiently from the back and hamstring problems that he sustained in the midst of Middlesbrough's 3-3 draw at Old Trafford 12 days ago, then together the trio might prove more than Chelsea's suspect defence can cope with.

The defensive frailties of both teams militate towards a high-scoring game, a more open game than the disap-pointing bore of Manchester United's 1-0 victory over Liverpool last year — a game salvaged only by Eric Cantona's late winner.

If Middlesbrough are still weighed down by the misery of relegation, then the game will surely be wrested from them by Zola and Hughes, one of only five post-war players to compete in five finals.

Zola, who was presented with the Football Writers' Association player of the year award in London on Thursday night, has excelled in his first season in England and has formed such a formidable partnership with Hughes that Gianluca Vialli has been rooted to the bench for much of the be allowed just five minutes on the pitch at Wembley today.

It was Zola's bravura goal, a sweet turn and unstoppable shot, that proved the highlight of Chelsea's semi-final victory over Wimbledon.

Juninho, left, and Zola, of Middlesbrough and Chelsea respectively, both hope to make the match-winning contribution to the FA Cup Final at Weinbley this afternoon

With that attack complemented by the guile of di Matteo and the consistency of Wise and Petrescu on the flanks and the fine passing of Leboeuf from defence, Chelsea should be the stronger side. Gullit, though, dismissed all talk of them being favourites yesterday.

"I don't think we are favourites much." Gullit said. We are only confident about our possibilities and

England prepare to pick both Hollioakes

ENGLAND'S cricket selectors may be about to stun us all. Of habit and inclination, the breed has been strictly conser-vative, but the latest, unusually young and streamlined panel will this weekend contemplate a switch to new liberal by choosing a raw teenager for his international debut before he has even claimed an unchallenged place in his county side.

The name is Hollinake. Not Adam, who will be automatically included when the party for the three Texaco Trophy one-day internationals against Australia is named tomorrow. who is only 19 and has just a handful of senior appearances behind him. He would be entirely right for the moment, underlining the message that England need no longer genuflect to custom and that age - or youth - is no barrier to swift advancement. Ben Hollioake in a very brief time. His plain figures may not be staggering. but there is something about him that transmits a special talent and a sturdy temperament. The first might not be sufficient; the two together should be decisive, for this is not a vulnerable boy likely to wilt under Australian attentions. The younger Hollioake was born, like his brother, in Melbourne and adapted impressively to representative cricket when chosen for The Rest against England A last already injured. He has missed all Surrey's cricket this week through a neck strain and although David Grav-ency, the chairman of selectors, has spoken to the player, England would be taking even more of a risk than usual by including him.

They have two options. Either pick Ben Hollioake above Lewis, which is the course of action I would propose, or select them both in a party expanded to 15, which is more likely to be the outcome. If so, Lewis should consider himself

this is Loaded for girls. But my tent mates are not. alone in their pre-occupation with their nether regions. Without exception, the first question from every woman I have told about my own Arctic adventure has been: "But how will you go to the loo?"

The answer is simple, and as dignified as can be expected in the circumstances. The bright red outer suits have been cumningly customised by the men behind the women on this trip with a zip which runs from the navel, hugging the pelvic region, to the base of the spine. The undergarments, made by Damart, apparently the last word in thermal lingerie, are two pairs of crotchless leggings: a very far cry, I can only imagine, from anything available in Ann Summers. When you have fought off the urge for as long as is humanly possible, you find the nearest

By the end of May, if Echo-does not falter (the only fear each of the team members admits to harbouring), the five teams which make up the McVitie's Penguin Polar Relay - a mouthful in more ways than one, since the women are obliged to eat four Penguin bars a day in appreciation of their sponsors — will have walked a staggering 400 nauti-cal miles across the shifting. sea-ice to reach the geographi-cal North Pole, the fixed point at the top of the world. The temperature in the tent at base camp, given that we are sitting on a carpet of snow, could almost be described as warm — "toasty", as the women like to say. Dangling above us is a sort of clothes line, to which six pairs of gloves are secured by pegs. During my sleepless hours, when the tem-one corner is a small mountain perature drops and my face of ice which has been chipped begins to freeze into a grimace, the navy fingers seem to beckon eerily, buffeted by the intermittent gusts of icy wind.

Everything has a place and a number of functions. A ski holds up the roof of the circular tent, which the team members erect in no time at all. How they will manage in a blizzard is another matter; it's no joke if your tent flies away when you're in 45C conditions. In off a glacier and is used for cooking the evening meal: Alfredo Primavera pasta, which is surprisingly delicious when you are expecting something hideous, like tinned sparn hash. Plastic containers are filled with the boiled ice to be decanted in pans for tomorrow's breakfast, and double as hot water bottles at night. The expedition coach, Geoff Somers, a Cumbrian with a misleadingly tough exterior who spends his life moving from one expedition to another through the jungle, across the desert, over ice, is coping man-fully with this bewildering onslaught of femininity. When

Pom, Lucy, Zoe and Caroline aren't discussing gynaecologi-cal and scatological problems, they are assiduously off-setting the whiffy effects of their training with liberal doses of Chanel

The expedition is the brainchild of Caroline Hamilton, a 33-year-old merchant banker turned film financier. Fellow Echo member Pom Oliver, in her mid-40s, is a partner in her company. Zoe Hudson, a sports physiotherapist (handy on an expedition) shares a London East End warehouse conversion with Caroline off Brick Lane. Lucy Roberts, a lighting designer who intends to return to journalism after this trip, is the fourth member of the party.

amilton was a tomboyish girl, with three older brothers, brought up by her headmaster father to be fearless and to achieve anything she set out to accomplish. 'I've always wanted to be known," she says. "I've always wanted to make a mark."

Two years ago she met Pen Hadow, who runs the Polar Travel Company, and the stories of his Arctic explorations triggered something in her. "Here it is," she thought, "here is my opportunity." Together, they came up with the extravagantly ambitious idea of mounting the first all-woman expedition to the North Pole. Hadow has helped to facilitate it, but there is no doubt who has been the driving force. Hamilton's mildly dotty manner belies a muscular determination to get her way, without which the project would doubtless never have got off the ground, let alone on to the sea-ice.

Last September, 65 would-be explorers converged on Dartmoor for a weekend of rock climbing at night in the driving rain, abseiling, hauling heavy gear over boggy terrain; exercises in SAS-style training to whittle out the women from the girls. The 20 who made it include a Yorkshire mother of baby triplets, a 50-year-old teacher, a mother-and-daughter duo, a great-niece of the Queen Mother, and a student from Buckinghamshire. The women have spent the last six months training long and hard — as I discover to my cost when I struggle pathetically to keep up with them. All the hours in London gyms and the weekends in the country dragging tyres over moors have honed their bodies into lean survival machines.

I had thought to model myself on Nanook of the North, but end up as Ab Fab in the Arctic. "Honestly, darlings," I want to whimper in Edina-like protest, "can't you tell when someone's had enough." It is my fault, of course, for foolishly volunteering to get into the spirit of things.

This involves the indignity — only the first of many — of being trussed into a deeply unsexy corset-cum-harness which is connected to a pulk (or sled) bearing, in my case, a trifling 20lb of salt. The pulks of our Arctic heroines, to give you an idea of their strength and stamina, are weighed down with almost four times that load. The team members will have to carry two weeks of supplies, with no food drops, as Rookery, the men's den and Operation Headquarters, with fax, phone and Web site, is one of amiable heartiness. Everyone has a soubriquet and a barrel or two to his name. Occasionally, when I begin to lose the plot, I find myself referring to Nobby (Peter Noble-Jones) as Noddy. or Smithy (Mike Ewart-Smith) aka Goldy, as Honey or Sweetie. This amnesia may be my strain of Arctic Madness, the condition that locals lampoon during the "silly season" when "the Crazies" come up to pit themselves against an environment which only the Inuit people have the temperament and skills (sadly diminishing) to master all the year round.

The story of the men is as remarkable in its own small way as that of the women. In a role reversal which is as neat as it seems refreshingly effortless, these big sporting chaps, upper-class but without too much bray, have assumed the role of handmaidens: sewing and nurturing instead of hunting and gathering. Smithy, a Cowes sailing champion, has proved an able seamstress, navigating his way unflinchingly, with the aid of a sewing machine, through the gussets of 20 women's ski suits. The communuity in which the women have landed, like creatures from Mars, is an Inuit hamlet (pop 170) that has its share of the difficulties which, from Australia to North America, beset indigenous peoples attempting to adapt to modern society without losing their own identity. Base camp is at Resolute Bay, which lies at the tip of

thest-flung reaches of Canada's far north. It began life as a weather station and, in the 1950s, the Canadian Government planted the inuit colony in a ramshackle sprawl of flimsy-looking houses to protect Canada's rights over the land in the High Arctic. A nomadic people, the Inuit have two cultures. Three and a half miles away is the "other" Resolute: a base of about 65 permanent "southerners" who work for the Polar Shelf scientific research project or one of the local air services. As winter turns to spring, and five months of death-like darkness give way to the endless day, there is an additional fluctuating population of explorers, wealthy tourists, trophy hunters and engineers en route for the mines and rigs scattered across the north-

Rupert Pendrill Hadow ---Polar Pen, as he is known to his friends - has the name, the pedigree and the dashing good looks of a Mills and Boon hero, but with a disconcertingly modern, even feminist twist. I am fortunate enough to have him as a guide - my own personal polar explorer during a day of my stay at Resolute. And what a day.

can't see any white." Hadow says, gesturing all around us. "Show me some white." It is true that the longer you are out on the ice, the more your eye becomes accustomed to seeing. So what at first you think is a blanket white uniformity is, in fact, a shimmering range of pastels and creams which alters according to the time of day and what you can guess is night because of the cold kicking in and subtle changes in light.

At midnight, for instance, the huge blood-orange sun, which sits briefly on the horizon, seems to drip its rosy colour over the ice or heat it from underneath so that it glows baby-blue or candy-floss pink like the colours in a fairytale.

Flying into Resolute over what looked like the dunes of a beach and then the churning spume of the sea frozen in midcrest — a vision of nature in wresting this territory away from the "hairy-bottomed machismo" of the male adventurer. "Women have been psyched out of thinking they can or should attempt to do things in the polar region," he says. "Unfortunately, the Ran Fiennes mode of exploration - blood and blisters, pain and crucifixion - is what sells hooks."

one in our party, I find out

He also believes that there has been some investment in creating a pedestal - a temple to the heroic male ideal - to prolong the notion that polar travel is out of bounds for the merely mortal, particularly if she is female.

On my last day with the women, we hire a Twin-Otter and fly to Beechey Island, an hour or so east of Resolute. We land in a God-forsaken place which chills the soul: a vast, flat expanse framed on three sides by great cliffs, the black ridges emerging from their white coating. In the distance are four tiny crosses of bleached wood bearing the names of the young men in their thirties who died searching for Sir John Franklin, who led an expedition to Cornwallis Island in 1845. Nothing else remains. His body was never found. But he and the British men who came to look for him. and met their own deaths in this lonely terrible desolation, opened up the North-West Passage for the next generation of explorers.

As we walk back to the plane, the wind beating the snow into flurries which burn our cheeks. Caroline Hamilton looks serious for the first time on our trip. She mutters, half-silenced by the enormity of the thought and its implications, "What an awful place to die".

ummer coats are a must in a British climate and this year the selection is better than ever. Super-soft macs, longline jackets and menswear-in-spired looks are all in cooler versions of last season's styles, and many are in new materials. Natural fibres are mixed with breathable synthetics, and highly spun, fine-thread wools are woven into perfect

Faux leather and reptile skin coats have become very popular, particularly because the new fabric can breathe, and they won't be left behind and they won't be left behind when real leather makes a big impact over the next year

The look for coats today is as simple and clean as possible so macs should not be worn belted, because this interrupts the clean line — with a variety of lengths from soft, floaty maxi coats to tight blousons.

The Crombie-style, which comes from the Edwardian frock coat, is a favourite. and without too much shaping and tailoring makes you look taller. It can be worn with a pair of milored trousers or a simple skirt and matching shell-top, or choose tighter fitting tops and shirts.

With yet another drought threatening this summer, Nigel Colborn recommends plants that thrive beautifully on very little water

Bulbs to light up a thirsty garden

ith the Almighty, or whoever it is that organises the weather, promising yet another drought this year, and with the increasing likelihood of hosepipe bans, one wonders whether Brit-ages gardeners will find the coor-age to continue. Even the most tung ho gurus are suggesting that abandon conventional bests and orders and concentrate on Medierranean plants — or even cacti. But if, by Mediterranean gardens, they mean planting clusters those grey, leather-leaved scublets, evolved to handle 100F on a teacup of rain once a year, forget it. Such species may be handsome enough, jostling togeth-er in the macuis with an azure an glittering below and rugged funtains rearing above, but in average British garden they sit little islands lost in a sea of ark chip mulch. And how grim it grey folinge can look when the

Pis overcasi. Pie true Mediterranean flora is very different. Visit Crete, say, or Cyprus at the right time of year, and you will find that the countryside can could Britain for being green and pleasant with a richness and diversity of flora. Roadsides are golden with crown marigolds, ancient ruins are dotted with scarlet poppies or blood-red ramanculus, pinewoods are carpeted with wild cyclamen, often with peonics, and seeding hellebores towering above them. Even the drought-loving shrubs burst into colour, pank and white rock roses, fragrant styrax, silvery convolvulus, and oddball plants such as birthwort, so-called because their blooms resemble the human uterus.

With each lengthening day, the race speeds up to flower before the summer heat sets in, usually reaching a crescendo in early May. Thereafter, the barometer rises, the climate settles down and the whole region starts to bake brown.

Star attractions in the surge to bloom are plants which grow from bulbs, carms or tabers. Technically, these are known as geophytes, but it is simpler to lump the whole lot together — the list would include gladioli, tulips, anemones, fritillar-ies, cyclamen and so on — and call them bulbs. When dorment, these plants store their lifeblood (in the form of statchy or sugary food material in underground organs, biding their time until moisture and coolness encourage them to emerge again.

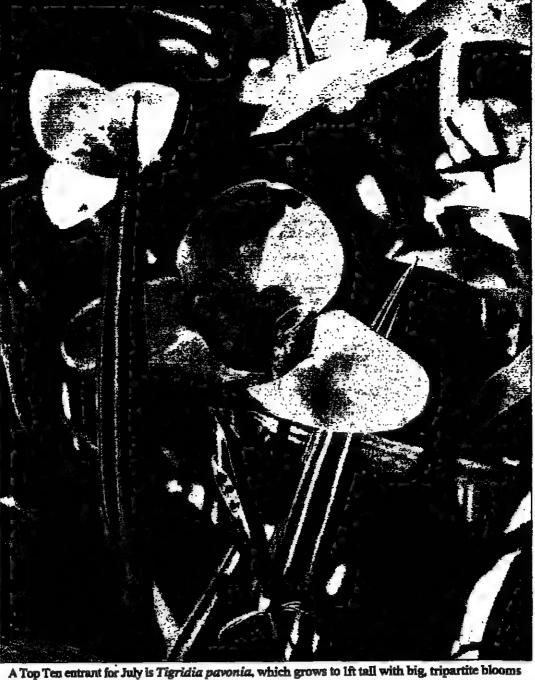

Going to ground, like a deciduous tree losing foliage, is an extraordinary development for survival in adverse times. In southern Europe, some of the finest garden plants evolved this way: irises, hyscinths, daffodils. But if you look at the global picture, the choice of bulbs is much wider. From South America, for example, there are such achingly beautiful garticrelatives as leucocoryne ("Glory of the Sun"). These have an onion aroma, but delicate blue or purple flowers, a little like extended bluebells. Asia has given us lily species. but the richest haul comes from southern Africa. Here, in the world's richest plant kingdom, a combination of cold but plentiful winter rainfall and hot, dry summers, has resulted in a bewildering bonanza of builds.

Wonderful in the wild, all these species have a huge and growing value as garden plants. As water becomes less readily available, bulbs provide a colourful, luxuriant alternative to those leathery individuals which sit above ground and brazen the summer out.

the joy of an English garden and climate is that, with careful selection and timing your planting, you can contrive to have a run of bulbs in flower from spring to autumn. Indeed, it would be a simple matter to have something bulbous in bloom every day of the year.

Garden centres usually stock the more commonplace summer bulbs, particularly those which have been extensively hybridised, but if your interests run beyond big, brassy gladiolas, boy from a specialist. And, because bulbs could almost have been designed for mail order, a supplier is no further away than unusual bulbs. His latest mailorder catalogue features species for every season, and a section on treasures from South Africa. "The South Africans are glorious," Mr Bowlby says, "but not all of them are hardy for British gardens."

When challenged to name the easiest and toughest, he comes up with Eucomis bicolor. "It survives outside in my Surrey garden for winter after winter." The colloquial name is 'Pineapple Lily', because its green and russet flowers are bunched thickly along the stem, beneath a topknot of foliage, making it look, at a pinch, like a pineapple. "They hate the damp," Mr Bowlby says, "but don't give a damn about the cold, as long as they are not waterlogged.

Agapanthus, too, are touchy: they need a relatively cool, moist period for building up their builds. That way they flower more profusely in summer."

For late summer, running into autumn, Mr Bowlby recommends the South African Nerine bowdenti as the most dependable. Sugarcandy pink, ruffled petals, delicate to look at but tough enough to withstand buffering September winds, it is as good to pick for the house as to enjoy outdoors. But plant the bulbs where they will be undisturbed, so that they can bulk up and provide successions of bloom.

The foregoing are all relatively hardy bulbs which you can plant and forget. But there is an even wider choice of tropical and subtropical species which, though tender, are so easy that it would be crazy not to plant them.

Each year, I plunge a big pot of Hymenpoallis narcissiflora, the Peruvian daffodil, into the gravelly

My old Japanese crah.

Malus floribanda. flowered magnificently until it lost a limb in a gale, after which it never bloomed again, and died. branch by branch. This spring I had it cut down, only to discover that there was blossom at the top of the one remaining branch, and healthy suckers at the base. Could I keep one sucker to grow into a new tree? — M.E. Jelley. Andover, Hampshire.

A Keep it if you must. It is unlikely to make a strong tree, though it should be true to type and not a sucker of plain apple stock, The chances are that the old trunk was diseased, and it is likely that sooner or later it will kill your sucker. It would be better to plant a healthy new tree and to remove the stump. Dead trees can still throw suckers: [ once cut down a mature handkerchief tree, which had died of honey fungus. I made the trunk and main limbs into a rustic bench which still managed to throw a shoot.

Following your article on vine weevils (Weekend, April 26), could you tell me the time spans of a weevil's life in a conservatory, and how long it takes from seeing the beetles to the grubs hatching. This, I feel, must be crucial to the success of treatment with nematodes. The weevils seem to love my lipstick plants. Aeschynanthus radicans. — S. Jones. New-

Aeschynanthus look rather like trailing tradescantias, but with terminal clusters of orangeyred flowers. They are in the same family as African violets and streptocarpus. And, yes, vine weevils adore them. While it is fairly safe to say that, outdoors, vine weevil adults die off in autumn and the grubs are winter dormant, under glass things are different. In the warmth of a conservatory it is possible to have several overlapping generations of weevils, and a less identifiable pause in their activity. So under glass the best approach to a visible infestation is to treat it three to four times at four-week intervals to make a clean start. Then you may treat as and when required or, if you have many valuable plants, on a regular (but expensive) basis. The nematodes remain effective in the soil for about four weeks.

I have a 6ft-high Kore-an pine and would like it to get no taller than Sft. Is this possible and, if so, how best do I prune it? D.K. Wilkinson, Lytham,

A This medium-sized tree is closely related to the European arolla pine. Pinus cembra, and has a loose conical habit. There are dwarf forms, and 'Winton' is said to grow considerably wider than it does tall. However, keeping small a healthy, non-dwarf pine of any species is not easy. It is possible in early spring to pinch out the terminal buds of the main branches, to increase bushiness, but once you pinch out the central leading shoot of a pine you lose the attraction of its symmetry. On the other hand, if you make the tree dense enough it might hide its structural shortcomings.

Half of the asparagus crowns I planted in my sandy garden in 1994 have died. So have others grown from seed. The spears grow lop-sided, yellow and stringy. I have seen no sign of the black and yellow asparagus beetles and have sprayed with pirimphos-methyl and derris. - F. Thompson, Retford, Nottinghamshire.

there is beetle damage. Look for eaten leaves, and for bark nibbled away causing yellow, twisted stems above. If you spot damage, pick off as many beetles and grubs as you can. Pyrethrum, permethrin and bifenthrin are suitable sprays with which to follow up. The problem could just be fungal. Both fusarium and violet root not attack asparagus. Look for the violet strands on the roots of dying or newly dead plants. infected plants should be burned and a different crop grown on the patch.

Occasionally, I spot-Occasionary, a spor-treat broadleaved weeds on my lawn with weedkiller. Can you tell me if any seedheads appearing while the plants die will be more fertile, less fertile, or not fertile at all? I do my best to remove the heads, but I am not always able to do it in time. - D. Jacobs, Colchester, Essex.

Most weedkillers work Most weedkillers work by disturbing some practical, mechanical aspect of the plant's life, such as its ability to make proteins or photosynthesise. Plants die simply of weakness. In the meantime, if they manage to open flowers and set some seed, there is no reason to suppose that they will not be perfectly good seed. So continue to take the heads off.

Denmans Denmans Lane Fontwell, West Sussex (01243 542808)

Between Arundel and Chichester. Open daily until Oct 31, 9am-5pm E2.50, OAPs £2.25, children E1.50

This three-and-a-half acre garden of mixed planting, scree garden, unusual plants and a glasshouse of tender species brings fond memories. John Brookes, who runs Denmans, trained me in garden design at the school within the gardens.

The gardens are partly Mr Brookes's work and that of the late Mrs Robinson who, in her later years, used an electric wheelchair to guide parties on a tour of the gardens. Mrs Robinson began the garden in 1946 and, in the early 1980s. it was taken over by Mr Brookes. He uses classic architectural plants, such as Euphorbia wulfenii, unusual flooring materials and large empty faux terracotta pots to give shape and decoration. Gravel plantings hold back the self-seeding yellow-speckled spires of Verbascum olympicum and the irislike Sisyrinchlum striatum.

works are introduced without necessarily using traditional formal formulas, such as clipped box and yew hedging. Instead, holly, cotoneaster, pittosporum, olearia and even cupressus are used to hold together a planting of varying foliage: large bluegreen pads of Hosta sieboldiana, golden marjoram, the dart-like leaves of foxgloves, and oleania.

Kim Davis holds the national collection of Iris siberica and herbaceous campanula. His two-and-a-half acre garden reflects the specialisation in alpines (the alpine aquilegias are at their best now) and herbaceous plants, and includes some unusual plants. The garden is a showcase for 50,000 plants. 800 of which are listed in the catalogue, though more are available.

Mr Davis says that this is a plantsman's rather than a designer's garden, and aimost all the plants are: labelled, including some rarities, such as a collection of 60 species of pensternons, which will be looking their best now (the nursery sells about 30 of them). Look out for two or three different forms of P. davidsonti, shrubby, mound-forming plants with flowers ranging from deep blue to lavender. The dwarf form, P. hamillis, grows to about four inches high with sky blue flowers. P. rydbergii is a good purple blue, and P. linaroides smoky blue. One area of the nursery has been made into a cottage garden of a third of an acre, with the same amount of land given over to an "alpine mound".

Mr Davis is developing a new garden, some of it put down to bold herbaceous plants such as the fiery-headed Euphorbia griffithii and spe-

The drought has hit this casis of colori and many of the rhododendrons and trees are suffering, but it is still a glorious place to find tranquilling. When I visited, a heron fished in one the woodland pools unworried by of presence. Set in Richmond deer park, the sense of retreat is enhanced by the large number of mature beeches, oak and birches which surround the plantation. There are witch hazels and styrax trees, and specimen trees including a metasequoia.

The centre was planted mainly in the 19th century. Streams, lined with overhanging azzless, sprout primulas, marsh marigoids and the great yellow hoods of yellow skunk cabbage.

Chelsea Flower Show: The stories and people behind some of the more unusual highlights to be seen at next week's extravaganza

Far pavilions bring exotic ideas to the big show

he Chelsea show gardens of next week look set to have more than a hint of the exotic, and even the Islamic, about them. After tree houses and temples, we are now heading towards tented pavilions.

Simon Shire's drought-conscious garden for The Mirror will concentrate on aromatic plants from the Mediterranean and culminate in a tented pavilion. But in a much more seriously exotic way, Julia Fortescue and Anthony Lockwood have designed a Mogul garden for the Maharaja of Jodhpur (also Rajasthan's Minister of Tourism).

This garden ends in a genuine Rajasthani tented pavilion of turquoise, blue, yellow and cream. It would be quite an eye-opener in rural England.

The Mogul garden has been created to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Indian independence, and it is based closely on old Indian gardens. There is the familiar central square basin and fountain, with four rills running away from it to represent the Koran's ingredients of life — milk, honey, wine and

Life is big at Chelsea, this year. Age Concern's garden is an allegory of life which kicks off with "a stream of babies' tears". Askham Bryan College's garden earnestly sets out to mingle cultures and philosophies as seen through the elements air, earth, fire and water. Its sunken pool surrounded by a ring of fire should be thoroughly Mozartian, though the installation of a wind machine to wave carefully chosen clumps of grass could be

Ms Fortescue's idea of using a tent came from a visit to Rajasthan to look at the geometric and intricate gardens in the ancient fortresses. She came across a workshop making fabulously decorated pavilion tents for use in gardens or hired out as marquees for parties. They ranged from the tiny to the huge. She also met Clarissa Mitchell, an Englishwoman working as a designer at the workshop, and it is she who has designed the details of the fabrics for the Chelsea tent and its interior. All furnishings are hand-made in the Rajasthani workshop and took three months to complete. Ms Mitchell has recently set up a business exporting them to Britain. The idea of an exotic tent in a garden is not new, even in Britain. Tents, especially with lots of soft furnishings, make a splendid focus in a small garden. In New York a few weeks ago, I noticed below my apartment a small garden in what my host described as "Thai Temple" style, and it had a tented and furnished awning in one corner. Unfortunately it had been given a fly-sheet of polythene to get it through the bad weather.

In the British climate, too, it all winter and expect it to last for years. So it is no surprise that the famous 18th-century Turkish tent at Painshill Park, near Cobham in Surrey, now beautifully restored and gilded, is a solid building underneath its canvas flounces. To banquet in this pavilion would, indeed, be to feast in style. Peel me a grape, Omar!

The structure of the Mogul garden at Chelsea will be simple four grass plaits, the Indian marble fountain and rills between, and a planting of old white roses, narrow cypresses and spindle palms. There will be trises too — not the usual Iris albicans seen in Moslem burial grounds but clumps of I. siberica. Something tells me the tent will steal the show.

Elsewhere at Chelsea, the New

Elsewhere at Chelsea, the New York-based designer Madison Cox has designed a garden for Yves Saint Laurent entitled "Yvresse — Rapture of the Senses". It is based on Laurent's Jardin Majorelle in Morocco. Here there will be a palette of North African plants, as well as all the usual paradise island regulars — palms, bougainvilleas, agaves and cacti. And water, of course: in its Islamic mode of mosaic fountains and pools.

Behind it all will be, not a blue tent, but tall, cobalt-blue painted walls. But if this sounds hot and intense, the Cesar Manrique Garden: designed by Peter Styles for Border Stone and Dingle Nurseries, ought to be the honest spot of all at the show.

Cesar Manrique was an artistic polymath and, until his death in 1992, was the leading artistic light of the Canaries. He worked on his native Lanzarote as artist, sculptor, architect, landscape designer and conservationist, and the garden is to be a celebration of his work as a huge amount of black-purple volcaric lava has been imported to create an imported to create an imported for a garden on Lanzarote's rocky shore. There will be Canary island plants, such as the ivy Hadera canariensis, which we use so much here, the yellow canary creeper Tropaeolum canariense (a South American native which should now be called T. peregrinum), the dragon tree Drapalm Phoenix canariensis. But there will be plenty of exotics, too, such as bird of paradise flowers, and prickly pears. Bougainvilleas are being imported for the show from Italy, and the prickly pears are from Derbyshire.

Cementing together the rocky outcrops will be "lava flows" of bedded coleus, calceolaria and busy lizzies. It might be exciting, it could be pretty corny, but let's wait and see.

One thing is for sure — with all those exotic gardens at Chelsea next week, some warmth and sunshine are much needed to set them off at their best. Tents are all very well, but camping — however upmarket — in the pouring rain is no fun at all.

Dramatic new styles sit hedge to hedge with traditional English gardens. but this year's Country Life garden has melded old and new, using the work of young craftsmen and designers set in an informal but traditional garden by one of last year's gold medallists, Rupert Golby.

The most striking feature is a geometric glass figure without facial features, hands or feet, seated on an iron bench in a niche thoughtfully contemplating the garden. As the light changes so does the figure, one moment refracting rainbows, the next mirroring the garden and sending sparkles of light across it, then made a herd of five wire sheep for Country Life. "I enjoy the work. The other night there was nothing good on TV so I went to the workshop and made a wire goose', says Mr Till, whose geese sell at £500 each. The herd of sheep can be bought for £5,000. The sculptures are made with strips of rabbit wire welded on to a tough framework of round-bar steel.

Success for Mr Till means he need no longer scrub around for abandoned pheasant pens with which to make his animals; he can afford to buy the materials new.

nother designer new to the garden scene is David Linkey, who has been tempted to make his first-ever range of garden furniture, commissioned by Country Life. "It was certainly a new challenge," Lord Linley says. "What amused and intrigued me was what lay ahead in the market for garden furniture.

"We had a year to do the commission and so we drew up hundreds of designs, some of them modern. But then I started looking at the garden furniture that people like — traditional furniture like the Lutyens bench — and decided on a traditional but stocky design."

All the furniture is made from English oak, oiled to show off the grain and protect it from the weather. The backs of the chairs have "a great swoosh of plants and flowers and life," represented by a fountain-shaped plume of slats. The legs are fluted and the back of the chairs are raked slightly to make them as comfortable as possible.

What sets this furniture apart is its ample dimensions: the chairs are about 27½ in wide, 40in high and 25½ in deep. They sell at £2,000 a piece. There are matching dining tables, drinks tables and benches and each piece is stamped with Linley's name.

Great Chelsea bonanza

How you could cash in when

RAPE AND piliage is how one observer describes it. Heart-breaking says another. "It is terrible on the last day of Chelsea when the gardens are sold off, torn apart and a lot is dumped into skips," says Jane Fearnley-Whittingstall, an award-winning designer.

the show ends

So that's that then. After hundreds of thousands of pounds has been poured out, months of preparation, a feverish three weeks spent transforming flat playing fields into perfect show gardens, it will all come to an end at 5pm next Friday.

The end-of-show bell is rung and the big sell-off gets under way. "The whole lot disappears out of the gates," says Doug Hammond, contracts manager from Pantiles Nursery in Surrey, suppliers to Chelsea designers.

Visitors will happily buy more than they can feasibly carry home and the Friday evening procession from showground to Sloane Square Underground is a scene straight out of Macbeth — Birnam Wood on the move.

Many of the plants are hired and not in theory for sale but as showgoers are often keen to buy — such is the cachet of owning a plant that has appeared at Chelsea — if the price is right a sale may be possible.

Most of the gardens have

Most of the gardens have been created just for a few glorious days. Country Life and Hiscox Insurance, for example, have splashed out £100,000 on their Centenary Garden and, harring an offer for the whole thing, it will be sold off — everything from bog plants to a limited edition fountain (RRP £8,000).

BUT NOT all gardens meet an undignified end. Charity gardens are often planned with a home in mind. Last year, for example, the Marie Curie garden was moved to one of the charity's hospices, while the Low Allergen garden designed for the National Asthma. Campaign opens next month at its new home, Capel Manor in Middlesex.

Julie Toll's 1996 Forest Garden, with its theme of environmental regeneration, has been appropriately replanted next to a new visitor centre in the National Forest in Derbyshire.

This year Help the Aged's garden, designed by Andrea Parsons, will be rebuilt at one of the charity's care homes, Little Bramingham Farm in Luton, while DGAA Homelife will be transfering its Bird Garden, designed by Bunny Guinness, to its Merlewood nursing home in Surrey.

Gothic pile with a mystery air

any are the houses that claim to being the location for The Hound of the Baskervilles. In Wales, one property - 2 rather ropey country house hotel has even renamed itself Baskerville Hall, on the most spurious of grounds. It certainly fits the bill, but not as snugly as 9 Collingham' Gardens, London SW5.

Yes, there is the problem that Earl's Court is hardly a fogshrouded moor and dogs are nor allowed in the communal gardens, but one could easily imagine a gaunt butler ushering one up the impressive staircase with a dripping candlestick. Sleep well sir.
Don't mind the howling.

The house is in the correct period for Holmes and Watson. Built by Harold Peto in about 1883, the property is in the "Jacobethan" style. It feels minor baronial with its leaded lights, five bedrooms, servants quarters, panelled rooms, vast fireplaces, yards of Delft tiles and a downstairs lavatory fit for a visiting maharaja. Nearly all the windows have loth-century stained glass and there is heraldic stonework above the front door.

The space is phenomenal for the location. At 4,700 sq ft, one might have expected the house to have been broken down into flats years ago. Luckily, a certain Mrs Dent lived in the house for 60 years until she died in 1984.

When the present owners bought it, the property was like a time capsule from the 1920s. The Survey of London, executed in 1908. describes the house as amply fitting a bachelor's requirements but not extravagant". I wish. I am a bacheior, and my one-bedroom flat in Battersea would easily fit into the 470 sq ft drawing room. The house would be extravagant for a bache-lor, and at £1.75 million, most bachelors I know would rather buy a river-view penthouse.

The drawing room could host a drinks party for 50 fat people to be an operating theatre. Just beyond it is a staff bedroom, which would make a far better study. As well as the cellar, there is a dark dining-room, which has been painted in burnt orange.

On the first floor, the present owners have made a curious choice for their master bedroom. Of the two bedrooms, they have chosen the smaller, although it still has a walk-in dressing room, a bathroom, and a good view of the communal gardens. The other bedroom - larger and with its own bathroom and roof terrace — is used by one of the owner's sons and his girlfriend. A boutle of "Big Hair" conditioner rather gives the game away. No doubt the owners juggled the merits of terrace and dressingroom for ages and clothing storage won. Both bedrooms have Delftclad fireplaces, and, in contrast to the wooden heaviness of the ground floor, are light and airy.

The second floor is ideal for two or three children, if two of them are docile enough not to mind sharing. The hedrooms are a good size. and there is a smallish open sittingroom which can be used as a "flop room", as well as a bathroom.

However, No 9 has one drawback that might detract many potential purchasers. It has no garden, (Neither is there off-street parking.) There is a putio which is not much bigger than the study. and there is direct access to the communal gardens, but this is a real gripe. If this is to be a family house, or a house for those who love entertaining, then a garden is essential. Perhaps the house would suit a bachelor after all. Agent: Knight Frank, 0171-9,8 4311.

A study in building a library

ooks do furnish a room, as the novelist Anthony Powell said. Most lovers of literature dream of a book-lined study, a room that can serve as an oasis of calm and contemplation, lined on all four walls with the collected wit and wisdom of generations of civilisation.

For me, two children and limited space meant that for years it was only a dream. Meanwhile, the books accumulated in vast numbers. Shelves were constructed in the hall and every bedroom had a bookcase, but still boxes of them had to be consigned to the artic. Then we moved to a larger house and found that there was one vacant room on the ground-floor plan.

gested that to build book racks from floor to ceiling would cost about £8.000. So I resolved to build the study myself. It was a bold decision, Estate in Herefordshire, home to a 50lb salmon christened Big Mamma after spawning a record five times, is for sale, Amanda Loose writes. The estate, with about four miles of double bank fishing on the River Cothi, includes a former Grade II listed mansion. Price £700,000. Contact Knight Frank on 01432 273087.

THE prime London market will confinue to flourish this year, according to Hamptons International. Despite average rises of 12.4 per cent in the first quarter of 1997, it expects overall increases of up to 25 per cent for some properties this year.

GRADE II listed 38 Sheffield Terrace, in Kensington, west London, is for sale. Designed by Alfred Waterhouse, who designed the V&A, the 1876 house has a garden flat and two self-contained malsomettes. Price E2.5 million. Contact Aylesford on 0171-351 2383.

built a room for his books in grand style

because my only relevant experience was a solitary term's woodwork when I was II. This had produced a teapor stand that wobbled alarmingly, because the doverail joints failed to doverail.

My research consisted not of reading DIY manuals but of visiting the National Trust properties at Chartwell in Kent and Batemans in Sussex, and making a study of the extensive libraries of Churchill and Kipling. While other visitors examined the titles that had inspired the great men. I was busy inspecting the tarpentry and calculating the length, width and depth of the shelves. My room was somewhat smaller and scaling-down was necessary but, if you are going to use a model, I decided to make it a grand one.

The plan that was eventually formulated was simplicity itself: eight rows of books between floor and ceiling, shelves individually bracketed to the wall and upright planks fixed with nails and screws at intervals of three feet. Anything longer and you risk shelves sagging in the middle under the weight. A deeper bottom shelf, jutting out an additional eight inches, created an extra surface for treasured objects such as the whisky decanter—another idea borrowed from the library at Chartwell.

I built shelves around the door frame, creating an impressive boxed-in effect that surpassed the picture in even my most optimistic mind's eye. The light switch was accommodated with an open shelf. There was a difficult moment when I came to the first corner, but a simple piece of panelling safely negotiated that potential hazard. The problem of topping and failing the stacks was resolved by using lengths of skirting topping.

Nigel Williamson in the library he built in a spare room. "It now contains almost 4,000 volumes"

though there was a lot of sawing of timber, the best news was that there was no need to re-live the horrors of the school woodwork room, because no proper joints were required.

After six weekends of hard labour and £500 worth of timber and materials, the room was surrounded by almost 300 feet of pine shelving. The wood looked far too bright and new but two coats of a mahogany stain transformed it into something with which Kipling or Churchill would have been more comfortable.

Unfortunately, when the books were added (of course, there still wasn't room for them all, so the bookcases remain in the bedrooms) they emphasised the fact that one or two shelves — all right, half a dozen — were not in perfect alignment. It was only a case of a millimetre or so, but it showed. Adding lengths of a wooden moulding to the edges of the shelves disguised the imperfections and enhanced the stylishness.

The study now contains almost 4,000 volumes arranged in my own idiosyncratic system. Since it was finished I have been on a guided tour of the much-maligned new British Library at St Pancras in central London. I thought it was magnificent and, in retrospect, I might have incorporated a few ideas. But perhaps those of us without even a woodwork O level should not get over-ambitious.

I furnished my room in the way I had always dreamt. Since doing so I have hardly spent a waking moment in the rest of the house.

If you're trying to buy or sell a house, the choice of solicitor could make all the difference, says Faith Glasgow

Is your lawyer a liability?

uying and selling property is notoriously stressful. It usually involves an interminable string of phone calls to find out what should be happening, why it isn't and when it will. In a busy market the whole process becomes even more fraught, as buyers feel the hot breath of the competition on their necks and vendors see their own purchases evaporating as the sale is delayed.

But price wrangles, structural hitches and boundary disputes aside, the waiting game is largely a consequence of the legal process of conveyancing — and if you land yourself with an incompetent or overworked lawyer, your interests will suffer, whether you are buying Estate agents, traditionally the target of most customers' frustration, are keen to point out the difference that a good — or bad — solicitor can make to a transaction. Colin Forbes, at Chesterfield in London, cites a couple of nightmare examples: "I know of a situation where the buyer's and the vendor's solicitors worked in the same building, yet the deal was being delayed; it turned out that instead of walking up a flight of stairs to exchange correspondence, they were posting letters to each other — second class."

In another instance, a contract race where speed counted for everything, the contract was put in the in-tray of the wrong partner, who was on holiday. By the time the paperwork was located, someone else had bought the house.

Bob Rixon at the Homebuyers' Advisory Service, says: "Solicitors have no sense of urgency. Everything needs to be in writing, so they'll write the letter, then sit back and wait for the reply and it's a question of how long they leave it before they chase it up."

Oonagh Alen-Buckley, a Londonbased conveyancing solicitor, argues that fax and e-mail are lawyers are shy of the phone.

When they could make a fiveminute call they write a letter and you get it two days later."

Michael Brandon, of Jackson

Stops & Staff in Chichester, says: "Speed is of the essence. When someone agrees to buy a place, they have usually got their own under offer at an advanced stage, or else the money is sitting in the bank."

This is all well and good in a straightforward deal, but in a lengthy chain, the process can slow down enormously — no matter how effective your solicitor — simply because of the number of surveyors, agents, lawyers (and buyers and sellers) involved.

onetheless, the period between verbal acceptance of an offer and legally binding exchange of contracts is full of danger, so the pressure is on for timescales to shorten. Ms Alen-Buckley says: "There is increasing demand to complete within two to three weeks. If the solicitor is aware of the timescale involved from the outset, he will ensure that the transaction is given priority."

lvor Dickinson, at the London agent Douglas & Gordon, says buyers and sellers can bring mishaps on themselves by choosing the wrong firm. "It is natural for firsttime buyers to instruct the family solicitor. But my heart sinks when I hear that Joe Muggins from Cornwall is acting, because they are not conveyancing specialists and they are not familiar with London. They ask questions which might be relevant for a Cornish estate but are inappropriate for property in London. A locally based specialist will have bought and sold other houses on that street; they'll be dealing with the council regularly; they'll know about quirks in an estate lease and so on.

will know the general timescale for searches, and whether they are running slow; he'll also know, for example, if a mining search is required in the area."

Personal recommendation is one route to a competent solicitor but reputable agents should be able to supply a shortlist of lawyers they deal with regularly and satisfactorily. Sellers — for whom the estate agent is acting — often stick with the firm through which they bought, but David Bedford of Bedfords in East Anglia says that if it is one with which he has had frustrating or inefficient experi-"and one or two are downright negligent" - he may firm is even more important for buyers," he says, "especially those coming from out of town."

Could this amount to estate agents scratching the backs of their legal chums? "Solicitors don't reward agents for referrals," Mr Dickinson says, "but it's in everyone's interests if we recommend certain firms. They are familiar with us: they look after us because we put business their way, so the deal will go through quickly.

Ms Alen-Buckley says: "The role of the estate agent is seen by more and more solicitors as smoothing the path in the transaction but many agents find dealing with solicitors an uphill struggle. It is through on the phone and their calls are rarely returned.

"A good solicitor will be sensitive to the client's need to know what's going on but a good estate agent will know when to leave the ball in the lawyer's court. Again, familiar-ity can make all the difference."

owever, it is a mistake to make finance a priority in selecting a lawyer. Deryck Highet points out that fees vary and while you could pay as little as £175-£200 or as much as £400, "does an extra £50 on your legal bill make much difference if you're getting a good job done? We recommend solicitors importantly we know they do a thorough job." And be warned: paying through the nose does not guarantee top-notch treatment. Mr Dickinson warns against going to large London firms simply because they have familiar names. Not only will ou pay over the odds, but you will be a small fish in a big and busy pond. "Have you ever been in a major solicitor's office? Their intrays can be four feet high and your contract could be at the bottom."

One useful development for solicitors, designed to streamline and speed up the whole process of buying and selling, comes from the Law Society. Known as Trans-

'Now that the political landscape has been settled, let's vote on the real landscape - and elect farmers and landowners every five years'

f it was said once, it was said a thousand times: "The political landscape of Britain has changed." Fine. Now let's set about the real landscape. Now that we have realised that by voting out the old and electing the new we can boost the mood of the nation overnight. why not apply the same principle to the countryside, also in desperate need of reform and revitalisation?

I have a radical proposal to make: I propose that farmers and landowners should stand for election every five years. If they win, they get their land back. If they lose, it's thank you and goodbye.

Think about it: why should they not be forced to show themselves in public and explain their policies for producing sufficient food, safeguarding the land-scape, keeping the balance of nature?

And if they fail in their promises, why should they not be kicked out?

For most country dwellers, farmers and landowners wield an influence as powerful as any that comes from Westminster. They are leading employers of local labour, owners of housing, sculptors of the landscape, sole keepers of the wildlife, prime producers of food. Their power over the countryside makes an ordinary MP seem impotent. What is Loonies - last time more, farmers are always moaning that they are misunderstood. Well, let them come out every five years, get on the soapbox on the village green and see if they can convince their own neighbours that they are fit and proper people to be carrying the dual burdens of feeding us, and caring for our countryside.

Up the poll: reform our countryside

This idea came to me a few weeks ago travelling along the trunk roads of Britain while the general election campaign was in its crescende. In our part of arable East Anglia, election posters appeared in the fields like bright blue weeds; an apt description of some of the people they were inviting us to vote for. Nothing wrong with that in the name of democracy. I too can put a sticker in the kitchen window and a placard by the front gate. The difference is that whereas you can wander around a village, see the signs and know who put them there twhy, old Mrs Middleton in the council houses is supporting the Monster Raving she was all for the Yogic flyers; must be tip), the passer-by has no knowledge of the individual who allows posters in the fields — if. indeed, they are individuals: much farmland is owned by "institutions". I could take you to a farm close to here where, if you asked to see the landowner, you'd be directed to Salt Lake City: it is owned by the Mormon Church. There are other farms where, if you wished to complain about mud on the roads at sugar beet lifting time, you would have to catch the train to the City of London and seek out the pension funds. Of course, you would have to turn up with a plump rabbit wrapped in a news-paper, freshly shot DOWN TO EARTH

on their own land, to remind them what landowning is all If an elected landownership achieved anything, it would at least flush out the faceless ones so that we could tell them what we think of the way they husband our landscape, and quiz them on their plans for the next five years. Having said this, I sense farmers bridling, the hairs rising on the backs of their necks, their heads lowered like bulls about to charge. Well, before you cut me down with your horns, let me say that in most cases I have no doubt that existing farmers would be returned to their land. Most farmers have a lousy balancing act to perform between making a living. nodding in the direction of conservation. grappling with the whims of European directives, clearing up the mess picnickers leave in gateways, shutting gates behind thoughtless walkers and dealing with retards who walk unschooled dogs in fields of sheep. To these heroes. I ogise. You have my vote.

ut there are others who would not B have such an easy time on the hustings. Not far from here, an entire village is living in fear that an incoming landowner is going to grub out hedges which have surrounded the village since medieval times. He has done it before, but they are his hedges and he can do it again if he wants. They cannot stop him. Others, bigger landowners, are planning equally dirty tricks. such as selling beloved views for supermarkets or gravel pits. There are any number of people living in rural Britain today who would like manifestos published on what will happen to the landscape they love. Many more would like firm promises on how the volumes of applied chemicals are to be reduced, the nitrate levels in water controlled, the quality of food guaranteed, and animal husbandry reformed so that mad cow disease will never happen

If you think these are matters for central Government and not for individual farmers, you are wrong. A farmer who gets out of bed in a bad mood can do a lot of damage in a single day. He might think twice if, in five years' time, he has to stand up in the village hall and explain why the ancient oak wood had to go.

Of course, this might sound fanciful and you will have to excuse me but, like so many others. I have been embraced by the new spirit of openness in the air; an apparent willingness to overturn secre-tive, corrupt old ways and to foster accountability. But might not the farmers and landowners we never see, the faceless ones, occasionally show their faces above the remaining hedge, please, and explain what they're doing and why they are doing it . . . Just so that sometimes we could go along and heckle.

Green shoots of hope among the ashes

s you drive towards Dartmoor from Teignmouth, you can see it from miles away across the lush Devon meadows, with their cattle and dragonlies: a black peak breaking the line of the horizon. This is Trendlebere Down, which went up in flames on April 7.

The blaze was almost certainly started by an arsonist. It began on the B3344, the road along the Dartmoor crest between Bovey Tracey and Manaton Everything was dry after the drought, and the fire swept down the valley called Trendlebere Combe, leapt across the bog at the bottom, and soared up the opposite hillside out on: to the heath. Two square miles of gorse and heather were reduced to a black crust.

This was probably the worst of the fires that have ravaged British heaths and moors this spring. But there have been many others, including a serious one in the middle of Dartmoor, another that devastated 1,000 acres of heather in west Cornwall and wrecked several sites of special scientific interest, one near Broadmoor in Berkshire and one that spread to woodland on the Isle of Wight. They have all posed a grave threat to wildlife, including scarce species such as the dartford warbler, the red squirrel and many butterflies and orchids.

I walked into Trendlebere Combe with Phil Page, the south Devon site manager for English Nature, which now owns the Down. The bleak, black hillsides rose high on either side of us. There was one small patch high up with a faint flush of green on it, where tiny shoots of bracken and grass were coming through. This, ironically enough, was where there had been a burnt patch before the fire and consequently there was nothing to burn, so the underground brackeri rhizomes had been passed over and survived.

These hillsides, now so silent, had been alive six weeks before with the song of dartford warblers, linnets and stonechats. The gorse had been a mass of yellow flowers and the grass was carpeted with violets. The caterpillars of a rare butterfly, the high brown fritillary, had been leeding among the violets and by now these handsome orange butterflies would have been flying over the heather.

Along the valley bottom where we were walking we found the only sign left of life - a few pink lousewort flowers among the sphagnum moss in the boggy patches, and a solitary bluebell on the path.

We went back to the road on the crest and stood at the edge of the devastated area beyond Trendlebere Combe. It stretched like a black desert across to a distant valley, where the brilliant green foliage of some beech crees was like a mocking backdrop. Thirty-fire engines from all round the countryside came to put out the fire, some from as far away as Barnstaple and Cullompton. One fireman, Mike Steer, found a roasted mallard's egg intact in the ashes. Now just a few sheep graze on some thin grass at the edge of the devastation.

English Nature also owns Yarner Wood, a stretch of woodland down below. the moor, where Mr Page has his house and his office; and we went back there to look at the pied flycatchers in the trees and talk about the implications of this fire.

English Nature only bought the Down two years ago and spent much of last year starting to cut firebreaks between the gorse. A special tractor had to be brought in to cope with the steep hillsides of the Combe. The work had been scheduled to resume the day after the fire. .

Dartmoor graziers have fired the gorse and heather since time immemorial, so fresh areas of grass would spring up from the ash for their cattle, sheep and ponies mone of which was harmed by this particular fire since it did not involve land used for grazing). The graziers still have an ill-defined right to carry out burning on the common land, and attempts to reach agreement with them are not always successful English Nature sets fire to limited areas from time to time in order to prevent the gorse growing too rise and to sustain the heath's character. Mr Page thinks this tradition of fires lies. in part behind the vandalism. It is somehow a "done thing" on the moor, and to do it for fun does not seem so heinous to

However, controlled burning must go on, and what is immediately important is to reach agreements with the graziers. Another dry summer almost certainly stretches ahead, and more fires of this order could leave the heathlands of Britain in a sorry state. There have already been several other, smaller fires on Dartmoor during this dry spring, but Trendlebere Down was by far the most destructive for years. Normally a burnt area will be resuming its former appearance after two or three years, but it is difficult to predict the future for an area which has been so badly afflicted.

It is still uncertain how much life survives underground. Some bracken will probably come up, and perhaps a little sap survives in such gorse stumps as still stand wanly here and there. The purple moor grass, or molinia, is much more deeply affected, and it may be necessary to resow much of the heather. The heather and grass are the home of lizards and adders, many of which must have been killed by the fire. As for the butterflies, the prospect is grim, unless a few larvae survived on the fringes of the fire and could start a population off again.

The birds will probably come back when the vegetation does. The stonechats and dartford warblers and limnets were just beginning to nest on the Down, and this year's breeding season but most will have escaped and Mr Page believes they have moved to unaffected parts of the moor. In particular, he has noticed greater concentrations of linnets in some areas and these may even have a chance of nesting again this year, since they are a communal nesting rather than a territori-al species. Established stonechats and dartford warblers would, however, try to keep newcomers out of their territories.

'e went to one streich of gorseland, with small birches and pines, at the edge of Yarner Wood. This was what the Down would have been like without the fire. Stonechats were chattering on high garse sprays, a whitethroat singing, a tree pipit soaring up from a pine tree and parachuting down again.

We got one glimpse of the long tail of a dartford warbler as it shot over the gorse tops and dived down out of sight. A buzzard rose from a clearing among some birch trees and gave us spectacular views as it circled round, trying to gain height. Even here there was a small burnt area -but this was one English Nature had cleared deliberately for natural regeneration. Suddenly a female stonechat flew down and started feeding on the black surface. Obviously there was some minute insect life even here. Life to feed life — a symbol of hope among the ashes.

at the Cairo national opera house in 1871. Goldenjoy Holidays have arranged a special package for this exclusive event, comprising a Nile cruise with excursions and full board, C class seats for the opera and return flights.

Accompanied by an Egyptologist, a cruise along the Nile is perhaps the easiest introduction to the culture and history of ancient Egypt. The itinerary captures the highlights of over 3000 years of the pharaohs and includes more than 10 excursions, including the magnificent temple of Kamak and the desolate Valley of the Kings.

With only 21 cabins the stylishly appointed Nile Pearl is large enough to ensure an interesting mix of people whilst still retaining a personal touch.

The traditional dacha is under threat as developers and gangsters turn villages and forests into building sites. Richard Beeston reports

Invasion of the New Russians

ike a slumbering for-est creature awoken from a long winter hibernation by the first hint of spring, Aleksandr Subbotin sniffed the May breeze outside his dacha and scuttled about his garden in

There is so much to do," he said, surveying his property with pride and contentedly calculating the hours of work ahead. There is the cleaning and redecorating to be done on the inside and, of course, the crops must be planted in the modest paich of ground, which realistically can only be expected to yield a few vegeta-bles, his emotions are shared by millions of Russians across this vast country during springtime.

In a timeless seasonal routine, workers and millionaires alike head off into the countryside in a mass migration to escape the cramped living conditions of the cities, and in some cases to plant the potatoes that will provide their lifeline for the coming winter.

However, the entire dacha way of life is now under threat. Although his plans might. Property developers, gang-seem grand for a rickety, sters and corrupt officials are wooden bungalow and its conspiring to turn villages, conspiring to turn villages,

The dacha has come to symbolise freedom from the state

We have gone from a time when everything was forbidden to a time where everything is allowed," said a Moscow planning official, whose de-partment is unable to keep up with the sudden construction boom which spreads 60 miles in every direction out of the

In contrast to the traditional wood-framed dachas, which blended into the abiquitous birch forests, the new country homes, called "konezhi", are not intended to be discreet. Built usually in red brick and adorned with mock-Gothic towers, the vulgar edifices are deliberately designed to show off the wealth of their owners. At Zhukovka, the most prestigious area around Moscow where pop stars and government ministers rub shoulders in the village market, the transformation is almost complete.

Andrei Konachenkov, a property developer, explained: cople want quality housing and they are prepared to pay for it," As he spoke, his team of workmen were putting the finishing touches to three prefabricated houses in the garden of a former wooden dacha, which in turn was being dismaintled unceremoniously log by log to make way for benches and an outdoor

:Although his project was more modest than most, he could still expect to rent his three-bedroom Swedish-designed suburban homes for about £6,000 a month, a bargain in an area where most huxury homes fetch £15,000. Not surprisingly, the build-ing boom and the invasion of the "New Russians" into the conservative world of country life has led to an explosive culture clash.

Villagers in tight-knit communities find themselves cut off from their new neighbours by high walls and security guards. There have even been cases of new dachas being torched, presumably by local arsonists angered by the invasion of their communities.

Cases of rural gangsterism have even emerged. An acquaintance of mine, who bought a plot of land beside a river, was accosted by his neighbour as he made building plans for his country home. "If you send any workmen out here, expect to get them back in a bag," said the man. "Your house will block my view of the water."

Unusually for Russia, the incident was resolved peacefully when the neighbour agreed to buy the plot of land and avoid what could have become a blood feud. At my own dacha, which I share with colleagues in the

outside Moscow, the tensions between old and new, rich and poor, are palpable.

The area was originally set aside in communist days for senior members of the Academy of Sciences. Today it is divided among elderly physi-cists, who walk their dogs and tend their gardens, and the new arrivals, who can be glimpsed momentarily as they race down the tiny village street in foreign sports cars and into the safety of their walled compounds. Some in Russia fear the advent of the new dachas will destroy a way of life and turn the landscape into what one critic described as "Mad Max goes to suburbia". But others contend that the country is big enough for all tastes.

that about 25 million people in the Moscow region alone owned land in the country side. Indeed, the community is so ule polling day for midweek because they feared the "dachniki" would not bother to return to the city to vote on one theme to explore the inner A recent study estimated large that during last sum-mer's presidential elections. the authorities had to resched-

of their cherished weekends. Whether it is a small log cabin with a communal well and an outdoor lavatory, or a sprawling new villa, the dacha is considered something of a birthright by Russians, who depend on their summers in the country to re-establish their roots with the land.

Numerous Russian writers and artists have evoked the workings of the Russian soul. Anton Chekhov used the evocative dacha atmosphere as the backdrop to all his plays. Boris Pasternak relied on his simple country home at the village of Peredelkino, outside Moscow, to inspire his writing.

he serenity of dacha life was probably best captured on film by Nikita Mikhailkov's Oscar-winning Burnt by the Sun, which depicts a perfect Russian summer's day in the country, until the hero is led away from his dacha by Stalin's secret police in the final wrenching scene.

"In Russia, which has always been totalitarian, the dacha has come to symbolise freedom of action and privacy," said Nikolai Klimontovich in a recent commentary for the Kommersant Daily newspaper. "It is synonymous with stable family life and security against peril — which in Russia means security from the state."

The revolution taking place in the countryside, he went on to argue, was the obvious reaction of a generation of Russians brought up in communal flats and hostels, who finally had the opportunity to build the house of their dreams. For the New Russians the dacha remains the subconscious symbol of freedom," he wrote. "We should not destroy them. They are a reflection of our natural mentality."

The Houdini in a fur coat

Furry friend: Mary Neale with one of her nine ferrets. The animals love to play and enjoy human company; they will happily sit on your shoulder as you go about the house ferret, you would be forgiven for thinking they are small, smelly savages ready to sink their sharp teeth into you at a moment's notice. You could not be further from the truth. Ferrets are becoming a popular domestic pet and, according to Mary Neale of the National Ferret Welfare Society, they are affectionate creatures, each with a distinctive personality. She says they make excellent pets although she does admit they are not suitable for very young children. The ferret is as much at risk from the children as the other way round. But she is quick to add that she would not trust very young children with any animal: "It's not fair on either the child or the animal.

NFWS. Ms Neale is happy to offer advice to anyone considering taking on a ferret as a pet. "There are three things I say to people who want to keep ferrets." she says. "First, buy a good book on the subject." The NFWS recommends The Complete Book of Ferrets by Val Porter and Nicholas Brown, known as the ferret owner's bible and full of useful tips and information.

Second, it is important to talk to local vets before taking on a ferret. "Not all vets have seen a ferret and in some cases

They make surprisingly affectionate and fun-loving domestic pets — but beware, ferrets are also expert escapologists. Brendan Martin reports

says. The NFWS has a nationwide list of vets who will treat

And third, ferrets should be obtained only from a reputable source such as a local Ferret Welfare Society or a recognised breeder. That, according to the NFWS, is the only way of ensuring you get a healthy animal. "The important thing you want to know is that if things don't work out, the person supplying the ferret will take it back," Ms Neale says. There are associations all over the country and the NFWS will supply a list of members as well as a free pooklet advising on all aspects of ferret ownership.

Dick Nutt, aithough a countryman at heart who likes to work his ferrets and share the spoils of a rabbit hunt with them, agrees on the creature's suitability as a domestic pet. He owned his first ferret when he was eight years old.

Mr Nutt who lives near Warminster. says people should not take on a ferret if they do not have time to play with the animal. Ferrets are not only loving animals, they also crave affection. They love human company and will keen to dispel is the belief that ferrets have to be allowed to breed. Mr Nutt argues that advises, "otherwise they dig this is nonsense: "All a careful owner has to do is take the The ferrets' sense of fun and desire to investigate their surferret out of season'. In other roundings means they spend words, have the ferret neumuch of their time burrowing tered by spaying the iemale [also known as a jill] or - or ferreting. Make sure castrating the male (or hob)."

"Jill jabbing", a hormone your home has no areas such as small holes near heating or injection, is a temporary solution administered by a vet which acts as a contraceptive when the female is in season. Unneutered hobs advertise their availability by giving off a strong odour during the mating season, which lasts from March to May. Castration puts an end to the smell and the mistaken belief that ferrets give off an unpleasant whiff all year round.

Ms Neale and Mr Nutt both agree, is the animal's legendary bite. Neither denies the sharpness of a ferrer's teeth but both are at pains to point out that bites are rare.

The ferret only bites when provoked, a feature common to most animals. "If treated properly they are not vicious."
Mr Nutt says, readily admitting that he has had his fair share of bites during the 44 years he has kept ferrets. "But what I have found is that it is usually my own fault."

Freddie, my two-year old dachshund, has a retained testicle. My vet says she should operate to remove the retained one because it is likely to become cancerous when Freddie gets older. She wants to neuter him at the same time. I am not averse to this because he can behave in an embarrassing way. I am told the operation will be more complicated and risky in Freddie's case compared to a normal neutering. What should I do? What are the chances of cancer?

A Turnours occur more of-ten in retained testicles than those in the proper place.

Sometimes an acute emergency can arise when a re-tained testicle rotates and, in twisting round, cuts off its own blood supply. But thousands of cryptorchids (both retained) or monorchids (one mis-placed, like Freddie) live to a ripe old age without anything going wrong. There is a tiny risk with any operation, no matter how simple. If Freddie is operated on now, he is young and fit and, while it is a big operation, it is not an emergency that has to be done in a hurry. If Freddie's everexuberant behaviour is a probem - which implies he is a frustrated dog — then neutering has a lot to commend it. It is your decision, but your vet advises it and I would be inclined to say the same: .

My friend tells me her cat has been fitted with a contact leas. Is she pulling my leg or are they used for named as well as humans?

injuries or ulcers on the surface of the eyeball -- the cornea. The lens keeps the surface moist and allows tears - nature's own eye wash and antiseptic — to remain in contact with the damaged area. This speeds up healing and removes much of the pain that accompanies eye injuries.

I have adopted two Ditches, a three-year-old labrador and a four-year-old retriever. Before I had them they lived outside and have never been house trained. After two months they still wet and mess most nights. I have tried changing the meal times, taking them out late. giving treats on the odd night they are clean, but there is little improvement. Have you any suggestions?

Use these every night and take the dogs out last thing and stay with them until they have passed something. When they do, that is the time for tithits and praise Rewards work only when they are given immediately after the event. The following marking is much too late. Do not punish the dogs for their mistakes. Be patient. They have to un-learn the habits of three and lour years, but if you persist I will be dry and clean.

Must children be labelled selfish and anti-social just because they don't have siblings? Adrian Mourby explores the parents' dilemma

Only child Thomas Cole, "He complains about not having any brothers or sisters when playing football," says his mother, Cathy. "The rest of the time he's glad he doesn't have to share"

Well, he is an only child

ble of behaving selfshily or of wanting the limelight. Yet if the infant who is hogging all the attention, or having a tantrum, - happens to lack brothers or sisters, his parents may find him doubly condemned in the eyes of many people. The phrase an "Only with a sad shake of the head as if it's the stigma of a habitual sinner and the root all anti-social behaviour.

Cathy and Mostyn Cole are aware of this with their son; Thomas, aged eight: "We went, on holiday a little while back with some friends," Mrs Cole says, "One day Thomas was making a fuss because our friends' children wouldn't play football with him, and I heard the other parents referring to him as pendant. Now, I'm sure he was being petulant but' the other children were getting into a state as well. But the thing is, because Thomas was an only child it was his bad behaviour that was singled out and commented on."

The Coles, who live in Penarth, South Wales, intended to have more children butafter Thomas was born Mrs Cole, who works for Welsh National Opera, suffered two miscarriages and so they accepted that it was unlikely Thomas would ever have any brothers or sisters. What I object to is the way other people feel quite free to comment on this," Mrs Cole says. Nobody ever asks, Why did you decide to have two or three children? But if you have only one you get asked, 'Oh, didn't want any more? or Couldn't you have any more?" And there was a time, certainly after the miscarriages and a returned to teaching part-time, all the grief, when I found that "I'm so aware that a lot of all the grief, when I found that kind of question harrowing. Even today I don't see why i have to justify myself."

Unlike the Coles, Barbara Pierce chose to have only one child. She and her husband Guy live in a restored farmhouse above the Wye Valley in Gloucestershire. Guy, an only child, wanted a huge family, but I'd been the middle one of three and hated it," Mrs Pierce says. "I used to daydream about someone discovering that actually i was adouted and that my real parents wanted me back and when I got to their home there wouldn't be any others. Just me, no squabbling over toys, no fighting for my parents attentions but, best of all, no jealousy. It seemed blissful and I used to vow that I would never put any child of mine through all that.

When we married, children was one of the things we had long discussions about. Fortunately Guy agreed with me in the end and I don't think he has regretted it."

The Pierces' daughter, Ra-chel, is six, and her mother has children's literature is full of maladjusted Only Ones," Mrs Pierce says. There's George from The Famous Five, who's a real oddity until she meets Julian, Dick and Anne. And Colin from The Secret Garden, who is helped by Dickon and Martha Sowerby. It's always the same only children are spoilt and seifish and can't relate to the real world until they encounter a happy, healthy band of siblings and learn about life from them. Of course, these stories were written at a time when you were supposed to produce lots of kids so that the Empire could be expanded. Nowadays that's irresponsible, but we still get all the propaganda pushed at us." Like Mrs Pierce, the Coles reject the suggestion that hav-ing their undivided attention has spoilt Thomas, although they admit he has something of a charmed life. As his father puts it: "If he asks for something from the shops we don't have to weigh up all the time, Well, if you have that your brother and sister will have to have something and it'll all be too expensive." But, if any thing," Mrs Coles says, "that's made Thomas more generous himself. He's always giving things to older children jus because he likes them. And he's terribly concerned for us. too. When Mostyn went into hospital recently Thomas made a real fuss of me and put his arms round my shoulders and asked me if everything would be all right."

This close identification with the parents is something often felt by only children. By contrast, Mrs Cole can remember how much she and her siblings formed a cohesive unit against her parents. "When my mother used to get ingry with me, having a sister two brothers acted like a buffer. We were able to support each other. But Thomas hasn't got that, if I'm angry with him it really upsets him. I tell him sometimes, If you had hrothers and sisters Mummy would be just as angry with them', but he hasn't got that sense of perspective. I think he gets the best and the worst of us as a result."

One thing Thomas does

aiready and they're really "If she were in a family of five brothers and sisters you'd think, How marvellous to have such a reflective, imaginative child'. But because she's an Only One, if I tell people about her stories I can see they're thinking, 'Oh, that poor Only Child'. That's what

There's no doubt that in this children can often feel themselves on the defensive. As Mrs Pierce says: "We are in a minority, those of us who choose to have just one child. and I think people can be very suspicious of anyone who's different like that. It becomes the big thing and any problems in later life get attributed to it. Certainly I know Guy found that.

"But I wonder what things are like in China. If you have a country where the norm is that everyone has an only child, do you get people shaking their heads and saying: Well of course he's playing up... he's one of two, you know ...

Solos who made it big

PITY THE only child, a much-maligned creature. Being an only child is a disease itself. one psychologist noted many years ago. Known as onlies, singletons, solos and linle emperors a child without siblings is a child scorned. In the words of Julie Burchill, the writer and only child: "Somebody once said that only children are natural psychopaths. It does take a big jump for us to relate to people in the way others do. You identify with people as objects to push around."

Leonardo da Vinci. Genhis Khan. Stalin, Elvis Presley and Indira Gandhi were only children, as are Betty Boothroyd. Enoch Powell, John Cleese, Nick Faldo and Ruby Wax.

Such children score higher than their peers on achievement, motivation and self-esteem "because they don't have the complication of the sibling relationship", says Dr Ann Laybourn, the author of The Only Child: Myths and Reality. "They are not rubbished and don't have their self-exteem dented by a brother or sister."

THIS CAN lead to distor tion and introversion in the only child's mind. The novelist Kate Atkinson says You are entirely locked into your own view of things. You make your own deductions and they can be very wrong, but there's no one to tell you."

Children with siblings are continually being compared by their parents. But an only child is never dethroned in the family pecking order, and bather in a pool of undivided parental attention. "You get the idea that you're a little bit special," John Cleese says in Families — and How to Survive Them.

PROFESSOR Cary Cooper, a behaviour psychologist at the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology. good self-image because they feel they're the only one. Equally, they know everything depends on them. Parents usually want their children to achieve what they haven't achieved. All that investment translates into achievement. But the driver to achievement is slight neuroticism.

Not that only children are maladjusted. Studies show that they get on fine with their peers and that they are less prone to psychological problems.

more than symbolic because the boundary is still disputed by the City and the Crown, and has been from the earliest period of English history, according to Joseph Maskell's Parochial History. The Corporation of London has for centuries claimed jurisdiction over the Tower Liberty. The Crown has constantly resisted this, repeatedly enlarging its fortress against municipal protests.

About 50 yards remain in dispute to this day, and every three years, the Tower warders stand where they consider the boundary to be, and the children run through them to where they think the boundary is. This year there were no warders, but we still cheered ourselves hoarse as the 12 boys and girls ran across to the Tower railings, and gave them the best and soundest beating of all.

THE travel The pride and the pain of sailing

Close shaves on the highway of death

One of the last great adventures is to travel by road from Kashgar in China to Islamabad in Pakistan

h My God read the inscription across the windscreen of a Pakistani minibus as it careered. down the Karakoram Highway. Several thousand feet above were the snow-dusted stiletto peaks of the mountain range from which the high-way takes its name; to the side of the road, a chain of whitepainted stones offered a token barrier between the minibus and a L500ft sheer drop to the River Indus below.

The minibus's moulf defily summed up one of the last great highway adventures which allows the traveller to go from Kashgar in western China through the Khunjerab Pass and to travel the length of the Karakoram Highway to Pakistan, a road hacked through mountain rock for 1,000 miles at a cost of hundreds of Chinese and Pakistani lives. It is a road which nature clearly believes has no business existing; avalanches and rock falls close it frequently, Enter the highway's mountain fastnesses and the only regular companions along the way are flocks of shiny black crows. The only people about are Pakistani militia or policemen enduring something akin to a posting on Hadrian's Wall for a Roman soldier.

Kashgar was the principal Chinese way-station on the Silk Road: a crossroads for trade and religion, linking the great Chinese empire with central Asia, and a superb. listening post for spies. In front of the ld Kan mosque is Kashgar's colourful and exotic Sunday market, offering every. licit and illicit treasure of the in the Muslim quarter, where guests sit cross-legged on vast tables, one can easily imagine the days of the Great Game. when the British and Russian empires yied for influence in

goings on the street below.

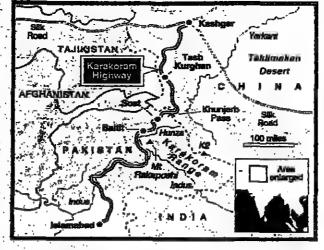

Now, the only intelligence gathering is likely to be by the Chinese, nervous of the influence from the Islamic nations to the west, or the conservationists, horrified at the pelts of rare animals killed illegally and sold in the market.

The route skirts the Taklimaken desert — the Black Desert which stretches into western China. Distances are-vast, journey times inde-terminate. The journey from Kashgar to the old staging town of Tash Kurghan takes seven hours along indifferent roads, making no allowance for the occasional flat tyre or filling up with dirty petrol. Meals are often robust and chewy; mutton and rice morning and night. But this is a taste of what foreign travel used to be like through countries that the Mongol hordes had subdued, at times you half expect to hear the thunder of hooves across the high steppe. instead, you catch a glimpse of the drug routes that branch off a long valley into Afghanistan. The Tang Shan mountains are a backdrop on the road out of Kashgar through miles of upland steppe in a landscape so vast that, paradoxically, clear days give the impression that you have only to put a hand out to touch a mountain. Most of the time the only accompaniment along the road are flocks of snow bunting, which duck and dive along beside the bus like tiny aerial porpoises.

Here and there clusters of yurus (Mongolian tents), are peopled by children in clothes magenta, the boys incongru-ous in miniature trilby hats. Often the boys have a camel with them which looks singularly unimpressed by travellers. The only other people on

The author travelled with Exodus Travel (0181-675 5550), which operates a 19-day Central Asian Discovery tour, starting in Tashkent (via Moscow) and flying out of Islamahad. The package costs £1,930, including flights, accommodation, guide and transfers. A local payment of about £100 covers all meals except eight lunches.

III Visas for Russia, Uzbekistan, China and Pakistan cost approximately £150 in total. A visa for Kirghizia is payable at the border and costs US$40 (about £25).

Health: The full range of innoculations is advised, as well as hepatitis B, water-purifying tablets and suitable precautions for upset stomachs. Check with your doctor.

Reading: The Travel Bookshop (0171 229-5260) recommends: Foreign Devils on the Silk Road, by Peter Hopkirk (OUP, 57.99); Buried Treasures of Chinese Turkestan, by Albert Von Le Coq (OUP, £7.95).

the road between Kashgar and Tash Gurkhan are herdsmenriding donkeys hardly able to carry them, cowering against the light snow of early sum-mer. Occasionally the carcass of an animal without sufficient reserves for the journey lies by the roadside.

The limit of Chinese territory comes up in a blizzard: a low, white building almost invisible except for its red flag and the smartest, most cheer ful border guards to be found anywhere their green uninot disguise their amazement that Westerners should have bought the native Islamic stringed musical instruments of Kashgar, which they consider out of the Stone Age.

It is at the border that you get the first sense of what it cost in human terms to build this road. A memorial list of names, etched in stones below a red flag emblem, is the first indication that bizarre friendship projects have a cost which goes far beyond materials and money. If ever there was a "political" road, it is this one.

Built largely with Chinese money, the road serves no particular trading purpose and was intended as a signal of support to Pakistan in its Pakistani businessmen who flock into Kashgar to buy cheap Chinese silk and sell manufactured goods, all travel

The road is a symbol of solidarity, a vast representation of a political ideal which has only recently reopened along its full length. As a result, concessions to tourists are few, as we find out when our Chinese-guided minibus encounters a landslide.

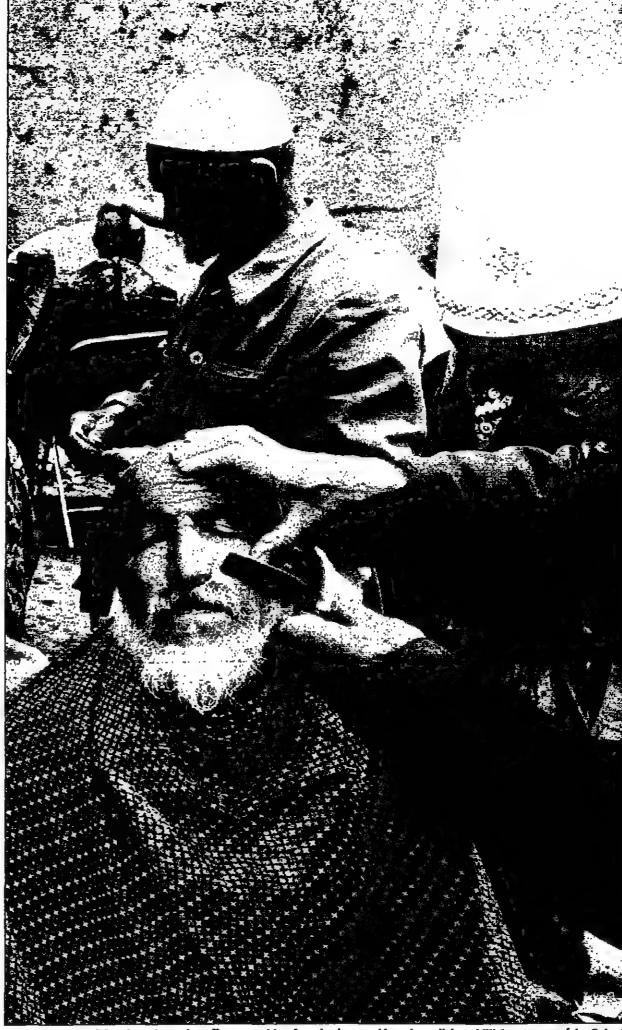

wo minor rock falls later, we pull up at a police post. The road is blocked ahead, says the moustached officer. We cannot go back without visas to re-enter China and cannot go forward: in prospect is a night in the mountains without food or shelter. There is a guest house but it is only for the military: radio appeals to the officer in charge in northern Pakistan are rejected.

Eventually, the Pakistan police take pity on us and yield up a small stone-built house for our use, along with their meagre vegetarian supper.We are 10,000ft up in the Karakorams, home of the notorious K2, and it is cold. I am the unlucky one for whom there is no sleeping bag. It is the coldest night of my life, despite the fact that I put on every spare piece of clothing I have. In the morning, the electronics of my camera are frozen and a cloud of crows dive on us, mocking our predicament.

Brilliant sunshine brings renewed hope and, with a team of Pakistani boys to help with the rock-clearing, we set off again, this time to be confronted with the mother of all rock falls. The road effectively no longer exists, and the only way to get through is to try to traverse on foot a few hundred yards of loose scree while dodging rocks hurding down at 50mp

"Never mind," the guide ays, "wait till five o'clock and it'll be all right." So we wait. The theory seems plausible enough: the sumshine melts the snow high up which, in num, soaks the rocks' sandy runway, eventually turning it into a mire through which no rock can roll. For the whole day we sit and watch the rocks while tension rises and confidence ebbs. Then, right on time at five o'clock, the mountain delivers its verdict on our plans. To the accompaniment of a massive roar, boulders the size of double-decker buses come crashing down. Momentarily stunned, we realise now is the time to make a dash for it: having relieved itself of that mighty load, the mountain could not have anything left to hurl. The next few minutes are a frenzied blur: running across the shifting scree, gasping for breath, while trying desperately to stop sliding into the river, and glancing fearfully at the mountain top. Suddenly, a guide grabs my elbow to keep me on track; and then, as the lungs go into hyperventilating overdrive, there is solid ground underfoot at last. The panic is over.

from Sost, down the valley of the Indus, the landscape becomes more fertile as you head towards the Hunza Valley and Baltit Fort, which overlooks this exquisite valley, whose inhabitants are said to be descended from Alexander the Great. Snow-capped mountains swing 360 degrees

As you go south, so the influence of Islam becomes more apparent and the townscapes become more masculine. By the time you reach Islamabad in search of a latenight bottle of beer, a clandestine request to a waiter in one of the city's best hotels brings only an embarrassed refusal. But then, the journey was billed as an adventure holiday.

Fiji: With three world-class diving sites, the islands are an irresistible attraction to the underwater explorer was out below the sufface of the warm Fijian sea, surrounded by a rainbow of colours. The soft coral, in magenta, marmalade orange, canary yellow and lilac, blossomed on the reef like flowers in a carefully cultivated garden, the vivid colours illuminated by shafts of sunshine penetrating down through the water.

Tyrone, our lean, imposing Fijian dive master, caught my attention and invited me to see what he'd captured. He opened his cupped hands releasing what can best be described as a miniature flying carpet. It was a Spanish dancer, a 3cm-long sea slug, which normally slithers across the reef, grazing on algae. While on the reef, this black creature with flecks of green, blue and purple is uninspiring, but release it into the open water and it becomes entrancing. It moves by undulating the sides of its body, gracefully swirling around until it settles again on the reef.

We were diving the Rainbow Reef in the Somosomo Strait, off the island of Taveuni in northern Fiji. Getting to the island is an adventure in itself. Qantas just wanted to weigh my baggage on the international flight to Fiji, but weight is so critical on the eight-seater aircraft that flew us on to Taveuni that I had to be weighed myself. As if the indignity of that was not enough, once aboard the plane I was asked to move from the coral, it has been the odd isolated clump. In Fiji you see whole coral heads and reef walls blanketed in its pastel colours. But there's more to diving off Taveuni than coral. Six-foot bronze whaler sharks, menacingly cruising the reef, are a frequent sight. And there are goby fish, which have a fascinating symbiotic relationship with shrimps.

he shrimp and the goby share a tunnel in coral rubble on the seabed. It's the shrimp which digs the tunnel but, with poor vision, it relies on the goby to keep a look out for danger. If you creep up on them, you can see the unlikely couple playing Mr and Mrs at the mouth of their home, the shrimp carefully resting one of its long antennae on the fish so that it knows when to follow its partner into the burrow for a fast retreat.

raveum has one of the most intimate and beautiful resorts I've ever visited. "Dive Taveumi" accommodates only 12 guests and is on a clifftop, with spectacular vistas over the Somosomo Strait to Fiji's second largest island Vanua Levu. The evening meal is eaten on an veranda, with stunning views of Fiji's South Sea sunsets. With such a small number of guests at the table, it's more like having a dinner party than a meal at a holiday

Taveuni: Fiji has two other world-class dive sites which have only recently opened. Six miles south of the main island of Viti Levu is Beqa, set in a large lagoon which has 100 dive sites, and offers the challenge to swim with oceanic white tip sharks. Beqa is also the home of Fiji's fire walkers, who tread red hot stones without burning themselves. The traditional ceremony is steeped in taboo and custom, with the men not eating coconuts or having any contact with women for two weeks before the ceremony. The third of Fiji's leading dive sites is off the island of Kandavu. One dive here is called "The Evil Trench" and involves descending 200ft. It's not for the faint-hearted, but those who are either stupid or brave enough to make the journey are rewarded with our mellow Fijian dive guide, Dan. The kava ceremony took place at his village beneath the statuesque coconut palms and within earshot of the waves gently breaking on the beach. The sun was just setting over the horizon as one of Dan's relatives started preparing our brew. A fisherman collecting his traps shipped his oar, stood up in his boat and put his hands in his pockets meditatively. I love a Caribbean beach in the rain, and swimming is special if you lie on your front like a hippo, eyes at water level, and watch a million tiny globules bouncing off to create a dazzle

The dive takes you through a tunnel 60ft long and more than 30ft high, and ends in an archway the size of London's Marble Arch. The exhilaration as you fly through this huge underwater structure is intense. The whole experience is enhanced by nitrogen narcosis, a phenomenon which occurs when divers descend into deep water and absorb such a large amount of nitrogen into their bodies that it makes them feel drunk.

Mr Bullen went off to reschedule a bank loan. The island's visitor figures had dropped alarmingly; even at Christmas, occupancy figures had been a pain and the catamaran he had borrowed money for was not pulling its tourist weight. He was independently stressed but most businesses were under pressure: Bullen's Travel Agency. After some banter with the wimpish pirates (they wore oilskins), I headed back into another phenomenon peculiar to swimming in the rain: the surge of flotsam gushing from a beach outlet, bearing mud and sticks and coconut husks and plants, plus the odds and sods of human neglect. There must have been good protein as well, because suddenly I vas surrounded by leaping fish and diving birds. There were only two other guests in the hotel, a Frenchwoman who had toasted her self to resemble a kipper, and her young boyfriend who was still as white as the beach, though clearly they were not ill-assorted in any other re-

Showers of egrets roust on it, their white plumage in the trees like blossom, seeming to reflect the wild francipani blooming on the headland that makes the fourth side of the compound.

From where I peered out, like a sheepdog through the heavy fringe of palm leaves cottage, I saw the owner in his little wooden bar/office kitchen simultaneously pouring drinks, cooking a meal and paying some fishermen for the snapper he was frying. This beach is the permanent mooring for the boats of eight or ten fishermen and they have built a shed for their gear.

There is a spread of ramarinds and 40 coconut palms. sometimes connected by harnmocks, with another 20 like a row of guards confronting the thick bush massed on the frontier, patrolled by a stocky heron. There is a nice row of sisal already six feet high and three large cast-iron "cop-

Bedeau shows up. leading a hiking group of four. He has taken them up to the Seven Falls for a swim in the pool below. Some of his hikes are tougher, like that to the top of Mt Catherine. He warns tyros that it will be hot, sticky. muddy and steep. He carries a cutlass in a sheath held together with wire and often cuts his own trails.

Now 56, he has been doing this since 1962 when he led four friends to the top. Thirty years on, they walked the same trail in a celebratory reunion. Telfor broke his rule and let them drive to the foot, because they had all become distinguished Grenadians with a bit of a belly. He has rowed the 56 miles round Grenada in "two sittings" in a boat of his own making, and says he is the only person he knows who hoats for pleasure, as distinct from fishing and carrying tourists.

If the beaches seem underused, says Telfor, that is because two out of three Grenadians cannot swim. However, on the evidence of Petit Bacaye, fishing is a better use for a beach.

THE GALAPAGOS ISLANDS

A 12 DAY VISIT TO ECUADOR AND THE ISLANDS OF THE GALAPAGOS ABOARD THE FIRST CLASS EXPEDITION SHIP POLARIS

the islands of the Galapagos are special in so many ways - a veritable Eden. Largely unspoilt by development, a place where fascinaring and diverse wildlife is both abundant and learless of man. Here you can swim with dolphins and Galapagos penguins, the most northerly penguin in the world, walk amongst the giant tortoises, watch the basking Marine iguanas and be fascinated by the rare and exotic bird-life. which includes 26 endemic

The ideal way to explore the Galapagos is by sea and our 7 night exploration cruise aboard the Polaris offers a comprehensive innerary and a wonderfully comfortable air-conditioned base. Accommodating just 80 passengers, the Polans is large enough to operate in remote environments in comion, yet small enough to enter ports and narrow inlets inaccessible to larger ships. She cames a fleet of motorised landing craft called Zodiacs, which can be launched at a moments notice and allow us to land on remote and out of the way beaches with great ease. In addition Polaris has her own glass-bottomed boat, making the undersea world accessible to all

On board there is a wide choice of inviting public areas including the Observation Lounge, where most evenings passengers gather for a bnefing or recap on the day with the expedition team and guest naturalists.

In addition there is an excellently stocked library and spacious and comforable deck areas. The Lookout Point is always popular, offering as it does excellent bird's eye views and nearby the Bridge is open to all as the vessel operates an 'open bridge' policy.

Poloris has a fine reputation as a top notch expedition ship and nowhere is this more true than in the attractive dining room. The galley, only having to prepare lood for a maximum of eighty passengers, is able to produce delicious meals which are served leisurely in a single sitting.

All the cabins have outside views, are well planned and offer all you . could require for the cruise.

The atmosphere is relaxed and informal. There is no need for dressy clothing of any kind, even for dinner. The small complement of like-minded travellers encourages a spirit of camaraderie and a sense of shared adventure. The guest and local onboard naturalist contribute enormously to your understanding of this world in microcosm.

hmet wore voluminous Ali Baba trousers and a fish impaled sideways through his skull, "Is a hat." he explained, scratching him-self with vigour and grinning broadly. Reasons of personal hygiene, we were told, cause many Turkish men to shave areas which other Europeans let flourish. The resulting seven o'clock shadow may itch. Clearly, Ahmet aimed to be the entertainer as well as engineer and general handyman to our four-strong flotilla of power-boats moored in the busy marina of Marmaris on Turkey's Mediterranean coast.

The plan was to sail in convoy to various small ports and anchorages along the coast and explore the remains that passing civilisations have left there. Our base would be a ten metre long Bayliner power boat: spacious, comfortable, well-equipped and capable of licking along at more than 20 knots between stops. We would cover far more in a week than can ever be achieved under sail.

One boat acting as pilot had Noel as captain and overall commander-in-chief of the flotilia. Our boat, Tropicat Dawn, had four novices on board. A couple from York-shire and a Belgian detective and his girlfriend sailed the other two vessels. On the face of it, steering a powerboat may seem rather easier than driving a car. The road is immensely wide save where it narrows through harbour entrances and other obstacles; the skipper simply presses a starter button, two enormous nostrils in the stern emit a whiff of smoke, the thrortie opens with a satisfying snarl from the twin diesels and after casting off the lines, away we go. hopes, of all there is to survey. Noel gave a comprehensive briefing, after which we all tucked away our fenders and were soon racing south across the bay, bows surging like the heads of horses in a cavalry charge. We slowed towards our first anchorage at Kumlu Buku and the pilot boat led the way in. Ahmet suddenly appeared on our bridge. "I help," he declared and after a tentative scratch began vigorous manipulation of the throttle and wheel.

The problem with a large power boat is that at slow speed it behaves rather like a brakeless lorry travelling through an oil spill. They have minimal keel and no rudder and rely on engine thrust to hold direction. The only way to stop is to slam the whole thing into reverse. Obviously the potential for accidents with novices in charge is high.

We were quickly moored Ahmet disappeared again with a gesture suggesting I had done everything very neatly. The Turkish coast is strewn with Roman and Byzantine remains; even the centre of Fethive has yielded a Roman amphitheatre which archaeologists are patiently recon-structing. We anchored at Ekincik and went on boats up the reed-choked Dalyan river to the ancient city of Caunus where there are tombs dating

In fine weather the valley is choked with butterflies but rain was pouring and the place was deserted. It poured all the way back to Marmaris where, alone on the bridge, I reversed into a gap between gulets and fixed the lines before a fishimpaled head appeared. "You done good. Very good." Ahmet said. Could Nelson have felt more proud? I doubt it.

AROUND THE WORLD: A WEEKEND GUIDE

BUDGET GUIDE BUOKS Spend a penny in the triangle

IF YOU WANT to spend a penny in the Balties, beware — or be equipped with the latest Lonely Planet Guide The letter M, the guide explains, identifies the gents in Estonia and Russia, but it is a V in Latvia and Lithnania.

Ladies must follow N in Estonia. S in Latvia and then it is back to M again in Lithuania. Just to complete the confusion, some lavatories sport an upside-down triangle for men, and a triangle the right way up for women.

Such nuggets of intermation, plus a bost of travel ups to help save the precious cloys and forms are crammed into Lonely Planet's new series of Shoestring Guides to Europe aimed at budget travellers. From the best fish and chip shop in Galway to the best "drunken fish soup" in Balaton; how to get VAT refunds in Slovakia or prevent over-zealous Czech waiters whisking your plate away — it's all there.

In Scandinavia & Baltic Europe on a.
Shoestring. the slimmest volume with—570 pages, there is vital information on how to exist on a no-frills daily budget of 275 krone (about £27) by avoiding alcohol, meals in hotels apart from allyou can eat buffet breakfasts, and even the coin-operated laundries.

New sections in each volume, the top ien and bottom ten, reflect the authors personal views, which are entertaining—
if also prejudiced and occasionally inconsistent. Thus the delightful Palma in Majorca is given the thumbs down in Mediterranean Europe's bottom ten-(along with the Greek island of Kos and the Casino at Monte Carlo), although fine Majorcan capital is later described as a "pleasant town worth exploring".

A BLANKET condemnation of France's north coast in the bulky (1,322-page) Western Europe guide completely ignores such treats as Dieppe, while appproving "the Alps". This suggests the author had never seen the purpose built French mountain resorts which have all the cosy charm of giant oil refineries.

Black marks are also awarded to British coastal resorts (the lot). Munich's Bierfest, Prague in high season, the tacky resort of Siofok on Hungary's Lake Balaton along with with the Magyars' schmaltzy music, Santa Claus's home in Finland, Denmark's Legoland without kids and seal clubbing displays at the Polar Museum in Tromso.

Full marks, though, to Lonely Planet for a good read and priceless information, plus maps that do not fall out just as you are about to board the bus.

MORE than 60 universities and colleges can provide useful and attractive accommodation during the long student vaca-tions. Oxford and Cambridge, many colleges in and around London, the University of Kent at Canterbury, the burgh and St Andrews in Scotland and Bangor and Aberystwyth in Wales are included in the list.

In many cases, sporting and other facilities are also available.

A night's B&B at London's King's College costs from £17, while Exeter charges £12.50 a night, £19 with en-suite bathroom; a self-contained self-catering flat for a maximum of four people costs from £241 a week. In Edinburgh, B&B is £24 a night per person, £45 with en-suite bathroom, while a self-catering flat for a maximum of five people costs £285.

isney this week gave the first public viewing of its purpose-built cruise liner. Disney Magic, when it was floated out of the Sincantieri shipyards outside Venice in preparation, for its maiden voyage early next year. The ship will be the first of two liners (Disney, Wonder is due to come into service late next year) which will combine short. Caribbean cruises with a stay at Disney. World in Orlando, Florida.

Interest from British holidaymakers is already strong, according to Andy Noble of tour operator Bridge Travel Group, which is the first UK operator to take bookings for the cruise liner. With the upsurge in demand for all types of cruise holidays, it is perhaps not surprising that a Disney-quality cruise venture is likely to prove popular." he says. "But it will be pitched at the upper end of the market."

A seven-day combination holiday of three or four days on Disney Magic and the balance at Disney World starts at £818 for adults, including flights, staying at a mid-price Disney hotel and in a standard cabin. Top of the range in a royal suite on board ship with accommodation at the Grand Floridian Hotel in Disney World costs from £1.571 for adults for cruises. starting in mid-April mext year. The price for children (aged 2-11) sharing their, parents cabin is a flat rate £796 irrespective of grade.

hildren, not surprisingly, are particularly targeted by Disney, which. claims to have allocated about ten. times the space (15,000 square feet) for children's activities compared with similar-sized liners. More importantly, it has: segmented children's activities according to age and likely interests: under-eights. have a play area themed to Captain Hook's ship involving physical activity and fantasy play; nine to 12-year-olds have. large-screen interactive video games and teenagers get a "hang-out" space close to the activity pool, themed like the New, York coffee bar in the American TV. comedy Friends.

Adults have their own "play" areas as well: an adults-only pool, three nightspots and a restaurant (one of the four on board), plus a child-free beach on Disney's 1,000-acre island in the Bahamas for stopovers. There will be no casino as this would be contrary to Disney's family image, but Broadway-style shows, films and games. Disney believes it will gain a niche in the Caribbean cruise market.

From John Douce, Coventry: We took a Caribbean cruise with Norwegian Cruise Line and found the company's attitude to taking drink on board aggressive and objectionable. Hand baggage was examined and all bottles were taken into bond for the duration of the cruise. Passengers who took a special drink with them because of the limited choice on board were similarly deprived. I would not object if this policy were stated in the brochure but we were informed only with delivery of our tickets a few days before departure, when it was incorrectly stated that this was part of the contract of passage.

Norwegian Cruise Line comments: Our policy is shared by many of our competitors. We had a number of incidents of under age drinking in cabins and moved towards our position at the end of last year. It is part of our contract of passage, which is on the tickets. With hindsight, we should have put details in our brochure. Our 1998 brochure is out in July and will include details of our policy.

the path was satisfyingly crunchy as I bowled along the converted railway line through Raydon. Great Wood. The sun flickered through the fligree of twigs, freshly green with the soli newness of spring leaves, and glinted on the shiny yellow petals of celandines nestling in the rich. celandines nestling in the rich-foliage of the verge.

Ahead of me an animal bounded out of the grass, its tail flowing. At first I took it to be a squirrel but. after a longer look, realised it was a stoar and stopped abruptly. The creature danced towards me. Mov-ing with a relaxed, loose limbed. giddy gait which belied its careful control and fierce concentration, it skittered from one side of the path to the other. Then, just a few yards from me, it slipped seamlessly into the grass and out of sight. I put my feet back on the pedals and crunched on.

This is the essence of a Sustrans cycle route. My favourite sections are the off-road bits and I delight in riding these special paths, untroubled by traffic, deep into beautiful countryside. The path through Raydon Great Wood, to the southeast of Hadleigh in Suffolk, now forms part of Sustains's "interim Route l' from Hull to Harwich, which opens tomorrow and is another section of the rapidly growing National Cycle Network.

This exciting project, supported by the Millermium Commission. and being assembled by Sustrans in partnership with local authori-ties and others, will give the UK a minimum of 6.500 miles of signed. high-quality cycle makes by 2005, high-quality cycle makes by 2005. More than half of the petwork will use maffic calmed prosin roads and lightly trafficked country larges while the remainder is to be on forest roads, as nevertal railway lines, canal sow paths and bridleways. By providing safe cycle routes, people may be persuaded to use bikes for shorter journeys as a sustainable form of transport, thus reducing car emissions and improving health. But I just love the routes for the chance to blke in safety through little known

The sound of my bike Armed with Sustrans's route wheels on the sine gravel of maps and a copy of the Hull to Planner, I loaded my bike onto the train to Hull. The panniers were bulging, the tyres firm and the water bottle full. I had no fears for the bike as it had been serviced recently - it was my own fitness I

> Inwardly, I thanked heaven that the majority of the route was going to be flat or, at worst, gently undulating. But, while variations in the vertical scale are strictly limited the route is far from straight and meanders from highlight to highlight, covering 369 quiles as it weaves its way between the two ports through the Lincolnshire Wolds and the arable lands of Bast Anglia.

From Hull, Route I crosses the Humber Bridge and passes close to Grimsby, with its excellent Nat-ional Fishing Heritage Centre, before diving down to the cathedral cities, of Lincoln and, eventually, Norwich Before it reaches Ipswich the way divides, with an eastern arm travelling to Februsiowe and a western one sweeping round lps-with and Colchester and then to Harwich.

At first sight the route seems to run through unvaryingly flat and potentially monotonous countryside, miles and miles of corn and rape interrupted only by occasional villages. But that is a driver's view, for my bike carried me through this landscape at just the right pace to appreciate its nuances. The local lding materials often gave a clue

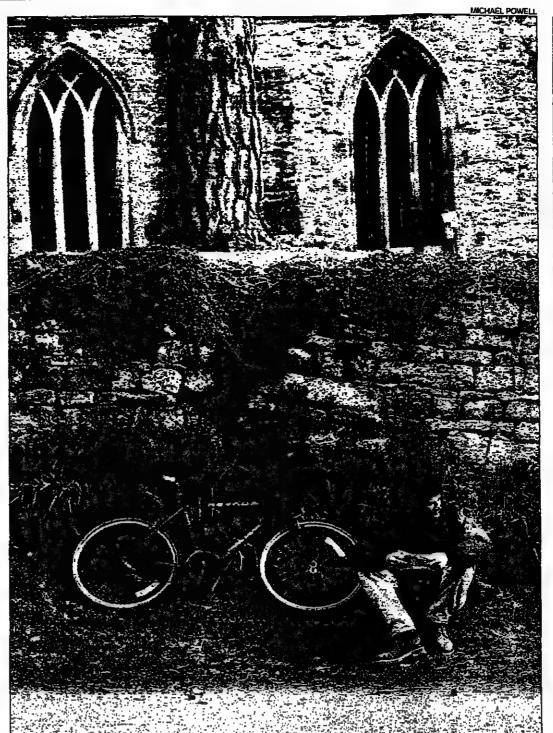

Sandringham, for instance, many of the house walls are built from thin, flat, biscuit-coloured cart stone, as if made of broken digestives: Further south flint takes over while, on the border between Suffolk and Essex, black weatherboarding and thatch hold sway.

Much of the countryside is surprisingly unoccupied and when I stopped for a breather after climbing to occasional high points, the views were often remarkably free of buildings. This is partly explained by the number of extensive estates, of which Sandringham is the most notable, and the route took me past its main entrance. But Route I is also regularly punctuated by villages which, together with the numerous places of interest on the way and the general flamess of the terrain, makes it ideal for family

I looked forward to the villages as places to stop for rest and refreshment and quickly became a connoisseur of the freshly made sandwich, the sticky bun and the chocolate flapjack. I can recommend Groom's Bakery in Burnham Market and Crocodile in Norwich's Tombland. But the one shop which promises to profit mightily from the opening of Route I is Reads The Bakers on the road into Framlingham. Its rooftop extractors pour enticing aromas into the faces of oncoming pedallers and only the iron-willed (certainly not me) could pass it by.

n the midst of thousands of fertile acres, many of the small towns have excellent produce markets. Asparagus, phimp and newly picked, was too delicate to squeeze into a packed pannier. Fresh sea food, especially Cromer crab, was also a feature of these markets, a reminder that the sea is often just a few miles away.

And Route I took me there, or at least to tidal estuaries. Woodbridge with its white clapboard buildings and mud flats packed with boats and piping oyster catchers sticks in the mind, as does Wells-next-the-Sea. I had to make a slight detour to reach Wells but it was worth it. Narrow streets of brightly painted

houses led me down to the water, although it took a further kilometre of serious, head-down pedalling in the face of a stiff northerly to reach the sea proper, the worst wind of the whole ride. Later, I coasted back along the sea wall with the sun gleaming blindingly off the exposed mud to sit on the quay and

But if I had to choose a favourite town it would have to be Beccles. I was impressed by St Peter's House, my hotel there, where I ate a delicious meal and drank coffee in a drawing room decorated in ornate Strawberry Hill Gothic; i appreciated the efforts of the local council for including bike-locking facilities in keeping with the street furniture: I enjoyed visiting St Michael's church described by one bit and the rest of the church in another". And, finally, there was the sign outside a local pub: Parking for Loaves and Fishes Only". Perhaps they will include bikes too now that Route I is about

FACT FILE

The high standard of National Cycle Network routes usually means that they can be cycled using almost any machine, from a mountain bike to a small-wheeled bicycle such as a folding Brompton. The most important thing is to have luggage space — let the bike do the carrying — a comfortable saddle and a water bottle. covered 60 miles a day, which is too high a mileage for a relaxing holiday, especially with children. Half that distance each day will you can join and leave the route at one of several railway stations on the way.

■ Places to stay with facilities for bikes are contained in the guide Quality Royal Hotel, Ferensway. Hull (01482 325087), from £34: Castle Hotel, Westgate, Lincoln (01522 538801), from £35: White Hart Hotel, Bridge Foot, Boston (01205 364877), from £24.75: Russet House Hotel, Goodwins Road, King's Lynn (01553 773098 from £23; the Crown, Market Place, Fakenham (01328 851418). Market, Beccies (01502 713203), from £20; Tamarisk House, Sandy Lane, Barham. I pswich (01473 831825), from £15.

breakfast per night based on two

■ The two route maps — Hull to Fakenham and Fakenham to Harwich - are available from Box 21, Bristol B599 2HA (0117-929 0888), at a cost of £5.99 each plus El.50 p&p, whether you buy one or both. Hull to Harwich Cycle Route Holiday Planner (£5 incl. p&p) is available from Lincolnshire LNI 3AA (01522 526450), which

AN EXCLUSIVE READER OFFER

THE TIMES

- More than 100 destinations
- Children under five go FREE
- Up to 72% off Virgin fares
- Save £20 London-Glasgow* • Travel from Jun 8 to Sep 27**
- Stay a day, a week, a month
- here is still time to get on board for the travel offer of the year. Simply collect 10 differently numbered tokens, eight from The Times and two from The Sunday Times, and you can travel to one of more than 100 Virgin Trains' destinations, below, from as little as £5 return per person.

HOW THE OFFER WORKS

Right is a map of the Virgin Trains network in Britain divided into four zones. You can make a return journey within a particular zone for only £5 return per person provided your entire journey is within the same zone. If any part of your proposed journey requires you to cross into another zone a further £5 for each zone must be added to the return-ticket price. If your journey requires you to travel to another operator's area, the appropriate payment will have to be made for that operator's services. Unaccompanied children cannot take advantage of this offer.

HOW TO APPLY

Each household can apply for up to four return tickets but for each return ticket you must have one completed application form plus 10 differently numbered tokens, eight from The Times and two from The Sunday Times. Booking could not be simpler with Virgin Trains' new easy booking system which offers free expert advice to help you plan your journey. Please wait for your Virgin Trains fulfilment pack which contains your personal number, details of how to book your ticket and full terms and conditions. Do not call Virgin Trains or make inquiries at rail stations for information regarding this offer.

to the astonishment of all experts. he was obliterated in the sixth and final game. Even more amazingly, many of the moves were known theory and involved a dangerous piece sacrifice, which has been recognised for some time as giving the white side a persistent attack.

After less than an hour and with a mere 19 moves played, Kasparov, although nominally shead on material with bishop, knight and rook against Deep Blue's queen and pawn, decided that his king was so

Kasparov's play in this game was unterly uncharacteristic. He chose a defence which he hardly ever adopts and which frequently gives Black a passive and defensive set-up. The IBM machine tore into Black's position with a powerful sacrifice and the human world champion seemed immediately demoralised. -

In fact, in this contest as a whole, Kasparov was by no means regularly outplayed by the machine. It was not so much Deep Blue's strength which defeated Kasparov as the knowledge that he was facing a tireless opponent, ready to exploit any tactical error which he did make. This led Kasparov to try uncharacteristic openings of which he did not have a periect grasp. Paradoxically, IBM's victory. was more of a psychological tri-umph than a technical one.

TERENCE REESE'S great book on cardplay. The Expert Game, has just been reissued. 30 years after it was first published. The original edition discussed some concepts that had never previously been analysed, such as the Principle of Restricted Choice, and various forms of technical and deceptive play that are now commonplace in top class bridge.

I felt slightly sick when I saw the text had been "revised and enlarged by Barry Rigal" - rather like hearing that a new edition of the Bible has been updated and expanded by Jeffrey Archer. I was pleasantly surprised to see that Rigal's material fitted in well. though his writing doesn't always have Terence's terseness and rigour. I doubt Terence would have approved of the phrase "sew |sic| a seed of doubt".

This defensive problem is one of the new hands. The French world champion Michel Lebel was East.

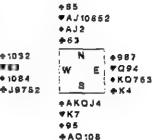

Answers on page 21 | Contract; Six Hearts by South

West led the four of diamonds, and declarer played low from dummy. East played the queen and South followed with the five. How should East defend? If you are stuck, a clue is that the hand occurs in a section headed "Creating Entry Trouble".

Lebel worked out that on a passive black suit return declarer would make twelve tricks easily. It seemed from his delayed support that the declarer would have king doubleton of hearts. He would draw trumps, play king and ace of hearts and ruff a heart, then cross to the diamond are to run the

To prevent this line of play, Lebel found the Greek gift of a diamond return into dummy's tenace, giving declarer a cheap trick, but taking away the entry to the heart suit. This was the full deal:

The declarer took the club finesse and tried to ruff a club, but Lebel overruffed for one down.

The book is not for beginners. but any serious player should have it in his library. I must have read the first edition a dozen times. The Expert Game is published by Robert Hale at £9.99.

THERE is a so-so rugby joke from my school days which summed up my love of a winter sport in which you can get your teeth knocked out and catch hypothermia at the same time. Asked what position you played, the response was "Left-back — left-back in the changing room". On reflection it was more wishful thinking than wisecrack.

The funny thing about Code-master's latest release for the PlayStation, Jonah Lome Rugby, is that it feels so humourless and delivers so few laughs. It is flat and limp, more mess than scrum. The graphics are not particularly apcealing, the players too small for clarity and the controls feel as erratic as the on-field action they are driving. Then there is the dire commentary, another job which sounds like it was knocked off in a cupboard under the stairs. There are two commentators and one of them sounds uncannily like Sean Connery — which turns out to be the highlight of the title.

Now that rugby has progressed from being a British winter sport to firid a year-round following on the world stage, there is demand for a good rugby sim. But we have been mightily spoilt by sports titles like football gaming into fast, thrilling experiences. These have raised our expectations but heighten the disappoint-ment of the mediocre. Although released now for the PlayStation, Jonah Lomu Rugby will later come out on several other console formats including, most likely, the Sega Mega Drive.

It certainly feels well suited to on an old 16-bit machine. Fortunately for Codemasters one stinker will not spell their downfall, as their excellent Micro Machines V3 for the PlayStation continues to do brisk business and that really does live up to its 32-bit expectations. Of the 24,000 famous people featured in Chambers Biographies CD-Rom, Jonah Lomu is not one of them, Nor is will carding, the nearest entries turned up in each case, searched alphabetically, are Fritz London, German-born American physicist, and Lucy, Countess of Carlisle, the second daughter of

with 24,000 subjects the Windows CD-Rom does not feel very comprehensive. John Major creeps in, but not a word on Tony Blair. Chambers Biographies on CD-with an extensive 500,000 word and phrase database, as are Harrap's Shorter English-French dictionary and Harrap's Dictionaire Multilingue, which covers 18 languages. Kingfisher's Learning Explorer is aimed at children and includes the texts of five books, such as an encyclopaedia and the Book of Words. The menu is colourful and inviting but there are some shortcomings. Look up poets and you can easily print out their potted biographies but not the examples of their work, even though most are clearly out of copyright.

The biggest problem with computing is that manuals are impossible to understand. No matter how much you want to put your purchases

Computer Bookshops, based in Birmingham, specialises in importing no-nonsense manuals. The At A Glance series from Microsoft

Press is especially good as it assumes the reader knows nothing and understands even less. Two newcomers to the large paperback range in the UK, Windows 95 and Windows NT, spell everything out step-by-step with rare clarity and an abundance of illustrations.

Finally, a request from reader Hamish Macleod of Edinburgh who wants to play the challenging oriental game of Go. He said: "The best way to learn would seem to be by playing against the computer. with the rules explained in the process. It seems almost as complicated as chess but, as there are many satisfactory computer versions of chess, surely the Japanese have produced a version of Go?"

If you know of a suitable title to meet Hamish's needs, please write in. As usual, please keep all your letters and Top Tips coming to: Computer Games and Pastimes, Weekend, The Times, 1 Pennington Street, London El 9XN.

This week's Top Tip. winning him a Microsoft titles, comes from Mr A. McKay of Cardiff: "Enable your PC to control household appliances by purchasing a trained Capuchin monkey from a bankrupt circus and teaching it to follow simple on-screen commands."

Unfortunately, there were no cassettes with the car to complete the period feel of a motor born in an altogether less complex age when the Rolls-Royce was a car only bought by the upper crust. Elvis was obviously among the upstarts of the Sixtles who not only had the cash but the international clout to demand a limousing whose armchairlike seats would normally never have been within a country mile of a denim-clad

"We've searched the interior for any more signs of Elvis but the only thing we could find was some handwipes from Cincinatti. The carpet is an inch thick, so you can wiggle your toes in it. You have the vague feeling that the dictionary has misdefined "free", when free servicing that you pay for is perfectly legal and above board

y car was given a free service the other day. Those of you whose cars do not get serviced for nothing will be green with envy, purple with rage and all those other cliches with colours in them, because whereas you have to pay for your servicing, my "free" service only cost me E185.35 including VAT. So now half of you are feeling a lot better, whereas the other half, those who share with me the enormous benefit of a car deal which includes free servicing, will be nodding sagely. You too have the vague feeling that the dictionary has misdefined "free", when free servicing that you pay for is perfectly legal and above board. It just makes you want to spit.

When I bought said car it came with a little servicing booklet. its cover emblazoned with letters an inch high saying: "Free for Life!" Below that, in half-inch capital letters, are the words "Service and MoT. These words are repeated in the top right corner of the service bookler's cover. Inside the booklet there are each, in very small letters - less than one-twelth the size of those on the cover - are the words: "Offer applies to labour only ..."

Now this did not come as a great shock, for I knew before I bought the car that "free service" meant "free labour", though I was well into making the deal before this became apparent. I should also stress, since regular readers will know that I drive a Ford, that the servicing offer is from the dealer not the manufacturer.

The fact remains that as well as having "Free for Life Service and MoT" on the service book cover, these words are also emblazoned on the outside of the dealer's premises in letters so large I would need Fireman Sam's ladder to measure them. One can reasonably assume that some customers are drawn to the forecourt by an offer that only tells half the story. There are mitigating factors. The actual cost of my service is not really relevant, because it included relatively expensive work (brake drums) which would not need replacing as part of a normal service. And there is the definition of the word service, which dealers seem to apply to the actual work, ie the labour, as opposed to the parts needed to carry out the work.

But how much am I actually saving by having the dealer carry the labour charge? The service I had this week was a big one, at 38,000 miles, but the ope before was a straightforward iC000-mile service with 27,000 miles on the clock. I took the car in, went for a walk and collected it just over an hour later. The Ford main agent I use charges labour at £39.75 per hour plus VAT, so I "saved" a total of £46.70. But the dealer is 15 miles from my home, so the round trip cost me nearly a gallon of petrol. The more recent service involved having a courtesy car: this cost me £10, because many dealers no longer insure their customers as part of their fleet insurance.

Had I taken the car to my local garage, a 10-minute walk from home, I would have paid a labour charge of £26.80 per hour plus VAT, a total of £31.49. So the saving represented by free labour is worth having, but hardly spectacular, taking into account the inconvenience of having to use

However it is the presentation that miggles. The car industry is fiercely competitive as to market share. Every salesperson knows that getting putative customers on to the forecourt is half the battle, so the enticing offer of "free" servicing is a key marketing strategy. I think some dealers are being a little free with the word free.

THIS week I discovered the ultimate in mini-roundabouts. Needing to retrace my steps (the motoring euphemism for being lost), I was pleased to spot a mini-roundabout, only to find it was impossible to circumnavigate the damned thing without stopping halfway and putting the car in reverse. Another triumph for the road safety fascists.

The series has replaced Formula One as the premier motorsport on BBC good news for motorsport fans because touring cars offers more excitement per mile than almost any other type of

That has been proved so far with the factory-based teams battling for the points, including our Volvo S40 Racing, the team managed by TWR, which also runs Damon Hill's FI Arrows car. We are following the fortunes of the Volvos, with Kelvin Burt and Rickard Rydell at the wheel, with

season this weekend. Brands remains one of the quickest and most thrilling circuits of the season, and Burt and Rydeli will be in for a tough challenge, particularly with the Renault Lagunas, prepared by Williams, and Honda Accords going well, plus the return to form of Frank Biela, the reigning champion in his formidable four-wheel-drive Audi A4.

So it's all to play for - watch for the S40s, complete with The Times logo on the rear Cpillar, as they sweep the Kent circuit. BBC is screening the first race tomorrow live at 12.25pm and the second at 3.30pm in Grandstand.

Smoothing out the lumps

The dreaded road hump, hated by many motorists, passengers and cyclists, is under attack from the people it is supposed to protect: residents of streets where speeding vehicles are thought to be a hazard.

Campaigns to iron out the humps and prevent new ones from being installed have been launched by residents' groups around Britain, especially in London where all 32 boroughs have spent millions of pounds on "traffic calming" measures. Critics claim the humps create extra noise and pollution, damage their own cars and generally cause more trouble than they are worth.

Road users, who have found themselves powerless, are hitting back with a series of legal actions. In a settlement thought to be the largest so far, Southwark Council in London has paid £2,000 to a pensioner who suffered minor injuries and saw his moped wrecked after hitting a poorly marked hump. "The entire concept of putting in road humps for safety reasons is at fault." say's Brian Simpson, chairman of Carm, the Campaign against Road-hump Madness. "They are more likely to cause accidents than prevent them. "In my area of north London one old lady tripped over a hump and fell while trying to cross the road and a woman cyclist needed stitches in a face wound after hitting an exceptionally high one. Passengers with back problems and other injuries suffer considerable pain when jolted over them." Simpson, an occupational psychologist has led a spirited compaign against Haringey council after humps were installed in the Miltons area of

Traffic calming has led to so much anger that many councils are having to think again, reports Tony Dawe Highgate. "The humps had and we have reported how been put in without any justifi-cation," he says. "There had been no accidents, no evidence schemes on a rat-run through an Exeter council estate and in Yeovil reduced accidents and of speeding or rat-running." To make matters worse, 27 of the 35 humps were illegally and dangerously high. After months of deliberation, and compensating some motorists for damaged exhaust pipes, the council finally agreed to reduce the ramp gradients and to further consultation which might just lead to the removal

criticise the schemes, but stress that councils should think carefully about installing them and make sure humps are not too high. Islington Council in north London is one authority that has agreed to remove humps after local protests. Tony Dikan, a council spokesman, explains: "We expected more casualties. Motoring organisations, aware of these benefits, have been reluctant to traffic to use Margery Street, a busy rat-rum into the West End, after installing humps in a neighbouring square. But residents protested that postal vans driving over the ramps on their way to the Mount Pleasant sorting office late at night were making a clattering noise and disturbing them."

Wandsworth council in south London has even withdrawn plans to instal humps on five roads in Putney. Officials will consult residents instead about "alternatives".

William Hatau, a publisher who lives injone of the affected roads, says: "Most people agree that himps cause pollution, noise and discomfort to drivers. There are better mea-sures, like mini roundabouts and road narrowing, to reduce speed and accidents."

Council officials in Glastonbury, Somerset, have turned a deaf ear, however, to the pleas of Cyril Holland, a funeral director, who complained that humps on the way to the trematorium were scraping the exhaust of his vintage Daimler hearse, bouncing the coffins and crushing the top hats of pall bearers.

The biggest victory in the battle against the humps has been won by Tony Blackmore. a south London pensioner, who sued Southwark Council for failing to paint markings on a road hump which he hit on his moped in poor visibility. He was thrown off and left with minor injuries and a £600 repair bill to the scooter.

For two years, Southwark denied negligence but a week before the case was due in court, the council offered him a £2,000 settlement. "I thought it was never, ever going to end," he says.

Ford's little Ka was de-

But Ford simply couldn't resist the challenge of turning the Ka into a rally hot-rod and there it was last weekend, getting all the "oohs" and "aabs" at the Manx Rally Championship as it battled between the massed. ranks of MGs and Porsches. One speciator, probably ex-pecting a family runabout, was taken aback by the sight of a squat little rally Ka with its new decals. "It looks like a little rocket," he said.

The Ka is not big, not loud, not that powerful, but the babysized, bubble-shaped car, considered more of a shopping trolley than a racing car, finished first in its class in its first Tarmac rally on the Isle of Man, weeks after it finished second in the gravel-roaded first stage of the Mintex Nat-ional Rally in Scotland.

The rally Ka's small body makes it look and feel as if it is going faster than it is, but the suspension handled all the island offered - winding, tight roads, hilly, rugged terrain, bad weather and sharp turns - without much problent. "It was excellent," said the winning driver, Gethin Jones. "It's the best handling car I've driven."

Andrea Hall, the top woman finisher who captured the Teleflorist Coup-des-Dames trophy, also praised the handling, calling it "brilliant, even with the wet roads".

The rally roadster was also a hit with the hundreds of. speciators who braved the wind, rain and cold to line the different stages of the race. I can't believe that little car

Ford is hoping this eyecatching "little rocket" will take off as an affordable introduction to rallying. With optional power steering, the Ka costs around £8,000, and he brochure said it about £2,000 in labour to get it done by a mechanic.

While the kit is expensive, it offers something unique for rallying: an adjustable suspension system that allows the car to run on both gravel and Tarmac with a minimal amount of tinkering. Also included are new brake pads, a stronger charte a selection. a stronger church, a rolleage, sump shield, gripper seats, tachometer and plumbed ex-tinguishers, while a high-lift cam raises the standard 60bhp to 75 and a shorter final-drive ratio helps the car accelerate more quickly.

national and international rallies, with the chance to pick up points and cash prizes in the 1.3 group A5 class.

Ford is also trying to entice customers with its own subchampionship, offering cash, prizes for the top Ka finishers. There are now five rally Kar running, and Ford is confident that the number will grow to about 40 next year. The company is aiming to have around. 300 raily. Kas racing around the world by 1999.

"It's very exciting and very exhilarating," says Kevin Shortis, co-ordinator of the Rally Ka Championship for Ford MotorSport. "We've got a great reaction to them. Since the car fiself was only introduced last October, we didn't have a lot of time to get the rally kit ready. By the time it was done, most people already had cars for this season. We're making more improvements and I think there will be a lot more out there next year. Pve already had about 200 inquiries from around the world." Among the improvements will be a more powerful engine, enabling the car to reach taster speeds. The Ka hit a offered by the non-rally version, but Ford would like to nudge that figure higher.

But we don't want to make it too powerful. This is a car that beginners can learn to rally in." Shortis says. "Sometimes with a faster car, all you learn is how to crash faster. We want our Ka drivers to learn how to handle the speed instead of letting the speed handle them."

And while the rally Ka might be less practical and comfort-

A different kind of success

FOR A WHILE, it looked as though Ford's buyer and sales are climbing fast now. Sales in bold experiment waygoing to fall flat. The Ka arrived last year in one of the glitziest launches the motor industry has seen, with stars of 7,000 so far this year in Britain. stage, screen and fashion magazine rounded up to lend their glamour, writes Kevin Eason.

Ka needed the fush because its radical styling apparently aught the buying public off-guard. Traditionally unadventuruous. punters didn't fancy parting with their money on something that looks like a cross between a bubble car and a Tooka toy.

Sales languished for a long time, a slightly worrying proposition for Ford given that it has a factory geared up to make up to 240,000 of the things annually. Fortunately for Ford though, familiarity s-breeding a less sceptical

Certainly, Ford does not deserve to fail with the Ka. Though the 1.3-litre engine is about as new-fangled as flared trousers, the styling decision was brave and answers exactly the question most often posed by the car cynics: why do all cars look the same? They don't —

That V8 was one of the most extraordinary cars ever to compete, driven and redesigned by the Romanians Zamfirescu and Cristea. They linked the steering to the front brakes so that the car slid around corners rather than being steered. It obviously worked, though Ford did not take them up on the system.

After the Gulf war and demise of the Warsaw Pact,

the Ministry of Defence reassessed its requirements for the British Army's lorry fleet. One view was that it needed to consider a new breed of high performance truck that could dash across country — on and off roads — to support fast-moving tanks. It would have to carry about nine tons of ammunition or fuel, be able to

seconds and pound over appalling country at 40mph or more. It would have to be exceptionally tough — and versatile enough to take on

The big problem was money. The MoD did not want to sink millions of pounds into the development of a super-sophisticated piece of advanced technology. So the

MoD's Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (Dera) came up with the idea of designing a new, very rigid chassis but attaching standard

HMD SPECIFICATION

Engine: Cummins six-cylinder, 10-litre 350bhp turbocharged and intercooled diesel (used to power many trucks including ERF, Foden and Seddon Atkinson).

Transmission: Eaton, with nine forward and two reverse gears (used by Foden and Leyland). Steering. All three axles - third at low speed only (ZF system used on Foden and Leyland-DAF).

Tyres: Michelin 475/80R20 XML with beadlocks for low pressure running.

Brakes: Rockwell Dura-Master inboard discs (also on Timoney fire/crash tender). Wabco six-channel anti-lock system (Wabco supplies anti-lock brakes for many manufacturers, including Land Rover).

Equipment: Air-conditioning and nuclear, biological and chemical protection by Howden Aircontrol (who make airconditioning and nuclear fallout, biological and chemical protection equipment for the Challenger battle tank).

Performance: 0-60mph in 53 seconds, top speed 70mph.

nents - the sort that are fitted to a wide variety of commercial vehicles - and using them to create a vehicle with very special capabilities."

John Blake, who has been test driving military vehicles for 25 years, showed me some of those capabilities at Dera's winding, undulating tree-lined test track at Farnborough, Hampshire.

But rally cars do not generally come with sk-wheel drive, six-wheel steer; 4t 2in high Michelin XML tyres, ninespeed automatic transmission and weigh in a: 20 tons. Nor can the driving position be switched in 20 minutes from right to left hand drive.

The throttle went to the floor, the giant engine growled and whined, and the HMD set off. Blake drove very quickly, very smoothly, controlling the monster through a tiny Momo creating when the second starting startin steering wheel inbre in keep-ing with a Ferrari than a military vehicle. The Hydra-eas suspension — distantly

MGF worked hard to smooth hollows as deep as shell holes and keep the HMD on track over a rutted, sandy surface. The automatic gearbox has a logic system so that manual override is rarely necessary, and giant inboard Rockwell disc brakes, aided by a six channel Wabco anti-lock system, kept things neatly related to that used on the under control. Leaving a swirling dust cloud in its wake, the HMD swept through loose-surfaced corners with aplomb, slalomed down gradients and plunged into deep ponds, hauling its bulk up the opposite bank, water streaming from its wheels and chassis as it set off again. Not surprisingly, Blake says he enjoys his

But fun though all this may be, the HMD - officially a combat support and resupply vehicle — is a very serious project. Arnott, Steven Goldsack, senior engineer and Phil Dandy, project manager, have overseen its design at Dera, followed by construction by Ricardo Special Vehicles. Although off-the-shelf proven components have been used, they undertake tasks for which they had not been designed, so a great deal of proving work is needed. "Our job is to demonstrate that the concept is feasible and that is what we will be doing for a couple of years." said Arnott.

pose-designed mobilvehicle was the Stalwart. But from the Eighties, the job has been done by eight-ton trucks, which are fine provided they are on reasonable road surfaces, but the Gulf war pointed up their limitations. A highly specialised vehicle like the Stalwart would cost about £300,000 at today's prices. A production version of the HMD might be built for £130,000-£150,000. But there is no suggestion it will go into production; its role is just to evaluate modern technologies,

It is a versatile vehicle, able to carry a variety of loads. It can also operate as an ambulance or personnel carrier. The cab is modular to facilitate the rapid switch from right to left hand drive - ideal when crossing to Calais from Dover. It has an all-wheel steer capability at low speeds, with the rear pair moving in the opposite plane to the front four. Minimum turning circle is less than 43ft. Tyre pressures are controlled and monitored in the cabin and automatically inflate depending on speed. It will wade through nearly 6ft of water and can be tucked inside C130 Hercules transport aircraft. Although some aspects of the cab would be familiar to commercial truck drivers, on the left is a bank of switches with legends such as "Ether Injection", "Fuel Line Heater" and "Infra-red on/off". For rear view, there is an LCD monitor and high resolution. colour by day/monochrome by night, camera system. And something else which the cabs of Eddie Stobart's fleet don't boast - it is sealed against nuclear fallout and biological or chemical weapons.

A roundabout way to fame in Stoke-on-Trent

hen Chelsea run out for the Cup Final today one of their former players, Alan Hudson, might be looking on with a tinge of regret. The team reached the final when he was in the squad in 1970, but he did not play in either the first match at Wembley or the replay at Old Trafford, which Chelsea won 2-1. When he did get to play in a final — for Arsenal in 1978 - his team was beaten I-0 by Ipswich.

Hudson had a distin guished career with Stoke ity, Chelsea and Arsenal in the Sixties and Seventies, but only played twice for England, although many say he should have won more caps. He was in the same side as Peter Osgood, Terry Venables and George Graham.

How did you first learn to drive?

I was really taught by watching my brother crash his car. I learnt quite quickly what

What was your first car?

My father told a friend I had signed for Chelsea - I was only 18. He gave me a Renault - fairly old, but I thought it was very smart.

What car do you drive now? I've just got a Mercedes sports which I drive with great care and pride. Do you enjoy driving?

I dislike driving in cities: it is just a nightmare. I do like driving in the countryside and often get up early and hit the motorways when they are empty.

What is your dream car?

At Chelsea we used to go to a restaurant in the Kings Road and the owner always parked his Corniche Convertible outside. He sometimes took me for a spin, and even let me drive it once.

What is your worst habit in a car?

I do not have bad habits in a car ... not when it's moving anyway. I have to say I am not against driving and talking on the mobile - especially if you are driving an concentration lapses far more easily when you are just driving along.

What infuriates you about other drivers?

The same as life: ignorance and selfishness. The casual Sunday motorist — of either sex — who is in no hurry and won't let you pass.

What is the most unusual thing you have done

I drove over a roundabout in Stoke-on-Trent once after an evening in the pub. The car was a write-off and I broke a hand. I gather the good people of Stoke have named the roundabout after me.

CATALLE SOUR GUIDE TO WHAT'S NEW, AND WHAT'S USED, ON THE FORECOURTS

WITH THE sun coming out more often, so are the convertibles so beloved of British motorists despite the fickleness of our weather. But many could be paying much more than necessary to insure their soft-tops. Over recent years car security has improved but the insurance industry has been slow, to.

privilege

recognise the benefits of alarms and immobilisers for convertible drivers. says Privilege Insurance. It offers substantial discounts to drivers who fit these devices to their soft top, whether it's an Escort Cabriolet or a Mercedes SLK. For example a 30-year-old woman with full no-claims living in Bath could insure her Jaguar XK 8 convertible through Privilege for £561 against a quote of £1,200 from one other leading insurer. Call 0990 998800.

THE Collector's Car Auction List, a guide to what's coming up at 45 British auction houses, has introduced a Fax-Back service. So even if you don't subscribe to the list you can get an instant report on entries for sales up to three months ahead. All you have to do is dial 0336 424800 from the handser of a fax machine and press; start when instructed. Calls are charged at 50p per minute.

■ APOLOGIES to Alex Moulton, designer of the RAC's folding bleyde that we tested last week for giving him an inadvertent knighthood Dr Moulton is a CBE.

Meet the turbo-diesel with attitude rying to get some-where quickly in a diesel used to be a contest between anxious driver and recalcitrant machine. No matter how heavy your right foot the response was often sluggish.

But in its latest generation of turbo-diesel engines. Fiat has changed all that. You can drive these just as you might drive any of the company's petrol products; rev hard, use the gears and you get a motor raring to go. Once started, in the top-of-the-range Brava TD 100 ELX, there is not much to let you know you're driving a diesel at all.

Since winning the accolade of European Car of the Year when the Bravo and Brava were introduced in Britain 18 months ago, Fiat has been steadily extending the range of

our screens promotes the all-new

Ironically, the first Primeras suffered hadly when they were launched a decade or so ago against a back-

contender in the Sierra/Cavalier/

Mondeo/Vectra sector, underlined by

The Brava TD offers high-mileage drivers low running costs with handling and performance says Alan Copps

these stylish-looking cars in both three (Bravo) and five (Brava) door form. In 1996 they sold a total of 22,000 here. The turbodiesels are aimed at high-mileage drivers ' who want low running costs, without sacrificing handling or performance. The company expects them to help re-estab-lish it in the lucrative fleet market which now accounts for more than half of all new car sales, but where traditionally Fiat has not been strong.

ROAD TEST

The Brava and the Bravo have given Fiat a new impetus in the lower medium sector of the market, where they compere head on with best-sellers such as the Ford Escort and Vauxhall Astra. It is the most competitive sector of the European car market.

The Brava is surprisingly roomy inside and more comfortable than you might expect in a car of such sleek shape More surprising, perhaps, is the noise level, significantly lower than in Fiat's previous generation of diesels, although not quite a match for the refinement of similar engines from the Peugeot/Citroen group, which must be considered the main rival on the Continent, where diesel sales have not suffered so much from concern over health risks

as they have in Britain. But what you get with the Brava is lashings of Italian

the medium range, then it demands to be considered. The swept-down bonnet line, body-coloured bumpers and mirrors and slim headlamps give the 100 ELX a sharp, eager look from the front. while the three layers of rear lamps slotted into the corners make it equally distinctive from the rear.

The design is functional, too, with the large glass areas visibility. Nor are the eye-catching looks confined to outside. The hooded instrument panel and prominent centre console which houses radio/cassette and heater controls both have that combination of elegance and function which is typical of Italian design. In a market where carmak-ers appear to be going to ever-greater extremes to add colour and shape to interiors, the simple mouldings and neatlypatterned velour upholstery seem aimost understated compared to some rivals. It's certainly a lot easier on the eye for a long journey.

But it is in fuel consumption where the car really scores. with an out-of-town figure of more than 50mpg, giving a range of 600 miles-plus on a four-door saloon with electric sunroof and anti-lock braking.

From the start, the British-built Primera gained a reputation for its quality and reliability, reflected in the confidence of Nissan's 60,000 mile/ three-year warranty. What drawbacks there are fall mainly into the niggle category. Interior trim is unimaginative, and while dials and switches are easy to reach and do the job, they do little to inspire. A strong feature is that the Primera holds its value better than other cars in its sector, good news when it comes to reselling.

The three-pointed star occes cacher and prestige. The fact that Mercedes-Benz cers are so popular as taxis on the continent should not so much detract from their image as point up their incredible build-quality and longevity. Launched in 1985, the car now known as the E-class is for many the utilimate director's car. Solid and well put together, there is a huge choice of engines indicated by the senes numbers, 200 (2-litret, 220, 230, 250, 260, 280, 300, 320, plus diesels.

2000 NEWS number plate, its age is all but impossible to discern. Cars will go on forever and estates in particular, while not so common discerning buyers who know resale prices remain high for any noises from the rear axi and girtches with the anti-lock

Cars with slipping automatic gearboxes which can be costly to put right. Also check uses from the rear axie

An automatic gearbox which offers more relaxed motioning, especially as the manual hypocally gives intile advantage by way of performance and is not as smooth as the auto braking system. The 2-litre cars can feel underpowered, probabl because they have to move so much Teutonic steel box transmission. Multi-valve 2.5-litre diesels give more power

Like Volvo, Mercedes always scores big on safety. The Department of Transport's "Choosing Safety" lables ranks the 200/300 as one of the safest cars on the goal above a warene and on on the road, above average and on a par with the Volvo 700 and Jaguer XJ series sudden burst of sneezing can "blind" a driver for 100 yards per sneeze, according to a warning issued by the AA at the start of the hay fever season. At 70mph a series of eight sneezes means the driver is unable to see the road for nearly half a mile.

Drive with care, there's a nasty sneeze up ahead

The warning highlights the dangers of a host of other minor medical conditions which can cause accident rates to rocket. People who have recently had heart surgery or who have epilepsy are obvi-ously at risk while driving, but less attention is paid to more mundane illnesses which can also cause accidents.

Every year thousands of citizens who wouldn't dream of driving under the influence of drink or drugs, get into their cars feeling tired, stressed or below par. Yet it is estimated that 40 per cent of road accidents are caused by tiredness or stress. One study of motorway drivers showed fatigue to be a factor in 11 per cent of accidents, with about 4 From hay fever driving risks. Claustrophobia causes motorists to tense when using underpasses or long tunnels and the tension can persist for miles afterwards. leading to an increased likelibood of an accident. Drivers with a fear of creepy-crawlies panic if a bug gets into their car, especially when they believe it's a wasp.

head of road safety, said: "The natural instinct is to get the insect out of the car, but by shooing them away or fiddling with the window controls, the driver is not concentrating on the road. A driver doing 70mph will travel 'blind' for more than 100 feet if he takes his eyes off the road for just one second."

Simple measures can protect drivers from the effects of minor illnesses, stress and phobias, once they realise the rivers with air-conditioning looking forward to summer gloating over their sweating "non-air" neighbours could have their smiles wiped off by unforeseen hefty bills.

Most drivers make the expensive mistake of turning their in-car air-conditioning units off as winter arrives and not using them again until the first warm days of spring. That is when the first expensive faults occur, because a unit that is not used is a break-down waiting to happen, with repair bills of £300 and above awaiting the unlucky motorist. On top of that, a damaged

Smart James, says: "Most units are reliable, but their downfall is if they are not used all the time. They need to be on and have the oil circulating around them all the time, otherwise seals dry out and gases can escape. This is our busiest time of the year, when people turn them on and find they have a problem."

A straightforward service, in which the gas is just topped up, might cost £60-£100 — and for owners of older cars, the news is worse. They are likely to have units Turning your car's air-conditioning back on friendly R134A refrigerant gas. A more serious problem, for instance to replace the system's condensor, a form of radiator, can cost from £350 on a Vauxhall Senator, rising to as much as £900 on a Lexus, says

In 1990, only a quarter of new cars came with air-conditioning. Today around half have it, and tworecommending motorists book their cars in for a regular airconditioning health check every few years, at £100 a unit for newer cars, and has launched a training programme to teach car mechanics the ins and outs.

Russell Wellings, managing director of Autoclimate, says. "To have different recommendations on how this should be done, but bills can vary from £150 up to £700. The units are usually very reliable, well constructed and maintenance levels are low, but none of the car manufacturers has a maintenance schedule for their air-conditioning units, built into the service intervals. The unit could work perfectly well for three or four years, but if it does go wrong you could be landed with a big bill."

RAC chief engineer David Bizley

Without correct servicing and maintenance, the refrigerant coolant level in the air conditioning system can fall, causing the unit's compressor to draw more on the engine for power. This causes extra drain on the engine, resulting in premature wear, increased fuel consumption and higher vehicle emissions.

Servicing in this area is a specialist job. not least because of the environmental, health and safety issues. Air-conditioning systems hold potentially hazardous waste in the form of HFCs - hydrofluorocarbons - gases that, while accept-ed by the Government as the good practice alternatives to CFCs. should not be released into the

the engine worked, and as PC absolute beginners we were drawn in immediately. "We must keep this sort of engine nalive and in front of the public so they can see what they have lost. If people realise this great loss, there will be a reaction." The "A" series cylinder head is not very heavy and can be carried easily. "You don't need much in the way of tools to do a top overhaul." Lester went on. "Just a small electric motor to true the valve seats. Not a messy job, so you can work in the comfort and cleanliness of your home without damaging the furniture." He then sent us down to the A car to decoke the tops of the B piston — a simple scraping job using any blunt-edged tool and wire brush. Catherine monitored the pieces while I got my nails dirty.

Lester is an old-time expert and cars are his life. "I love them and I hate them." he told me when we met at his Battersea home, and immediately launched into a particular problem of car ownership for Londoners. "Less than one per cent possess a dry garage maintenance. The kerbside can be hazardous. What you need is a nice flat place where you can actually work around the car.

"The majority of people come to car maintenance because they want to get control of their lives, partly because they are afraid garages are over-charging."

The present situation is a disaster. Most London bor-

Because of the cuts, Lester has gone freelance and teaches would-be mechanics the basics at a community car club. A complete ethnic mix from tor to bottom of society arrive with their vehicles, some dating from the Fifties. The type of work is enormously varied. Some people arrive expecting a magic wand or a genie to spring out of a lamp; the hard core stay on, learning how to deal with the main problems themselves under supervision, The group retires to the local café afterwards to swap

Lester's expertise began at the age of nine when he watched his father, an original member of the Royal Flying Corps, at work. "He could mend anything. I had a colossal admiration for him and I wanted to use my hands."

e followed the family tradition to train as a motor mechanic, but soon discovered that his heart lay in education. Some of his most enjoyable teaching has been helping boys considered disruptive or dim. The trouble has been to persuade teachers or parents that these young people who hate books are good at small repair jobs, and skills.

On modern cars. Lester was drawn into controversy: "We are getting the type of cars that people don't want. They are all right for travelling salespeople who mostly use motorways. but the vast majority of owners are not that sort." People want a car which is simple and easy to maintain and not expensive to run. Take the Morris Oxford, for example, such as wiper blades and lights, you can fix yourself. And there can be of off-road bonuses from Lester's lessons. When my loo broke down the other day, I fixed it myself by applying some of the basics he'd taught me.

Journeys of Eastern delights on classic wheels

New men could claim to be as proud to be British as Nicholas Brimblecombe of The Grand Touring Club, a company that organises nolidays in East Anglia especially for fellow Anglophiles driving classic cars.

"I think we have a lot to be proud of in this part of the country," says the quintessential Englishman, who is hoping to attract visitors to the region with a combination of British countryside, roads. food, architecture and cars.

But it isn't British holiday-makers who are getting behind the wheel of the club's fine stable of cars: it's motorists from the Continent, predominantly Germany, who are taking breaks with a slice of English

This year more than three million German visitors are expected to holiday in Britain. According to the British Tourist Association, they are the second biggest spenders (after Americans), spending £976 million on UK holidays last year. And with motoring Anglomania rife in Germany, where drivers are clamouring for traditional British machinery such as Jaguars and Aston Martins. The Grand Touring Club expects to be booked up this summer.

The company began four years ago. organising touring holidays abroad for classic car owners, but this year launched its tailor-made holidays in East Anglia with the added twist of providing the cars. The packages include visiting the region's stately houses and gardens from Constable Country to North Norfolk, eating and drinking local delicacies, staying in character hotels and driving on some of Britain's quietest and prettiest roads in a range of classic cars.

The Germans are coming — and they want to drive great cars on holiday, says Helen Mound

The Germans are most keen to get behind the wheel of the Jaguars," says Brimblecombe. "The most popular cars we offer are the Mark IIs and E-types. But we can arrange breaks in an Aston Martin Vantage. Rolls-Royce Corniche. even an MGA Roadster." As long as it's British, Germans want to drive it.

The cars are all in pristine condition, despite some being more than 25 years old. The smell of leather still bathes the interior, chrome features are polished to a perfect shine and metallic paintwork, although recent, remains true to traditional Sixties and Seventies colours.

There are some modern features, such as stereos, but they are reasonably subtle, and a Tracker security device, to help relocate the car if it's stolen, is out of sight. Only the clunk of the remote central locking seems a little out of place on a Sixties saloon, but the holiday motorists are more than happy with the occasional modern touch in the name of convenience.

owever, not all old British cars are a hit with the German holidaymakers. An HMC Mark IV. a convertible sports car that resembles the Austin Healey 3000, suffered some unkind words from a recent group. "They called it 'the pig!" says Brimblecombe, who was appalled. They said, 'We call it the pig. you call it the pig too, no?' and I answered that we most certainly do not.

They apologised and stopped after that?

The Grand Touring Club's breaks are ideal for German holidaymakers, because, according to the Tourist Association, they spend an average of seven days and countryside to the food. As well as packing hampers with local produce and restaurants that holidays — precisely what Brimblecombe is attempting to offer. He says the demand for treasure or antique hunts with questions on the region comes predomi-nantly from German visitors: "They like to go away having learnt something about the area they've visited." The club has developed seven routes. each visiting the best spots in the region in a day, so it can accommodate a week-long booking if required. "Most people want a two or three-day visit with a concern booking or a day at the races. And we want them to get out of the cars and experience the countryside, but the nontest are about 100 miles each, so they get to see favour foods from around the region. The Grand Touring Club can tailormake an East Anglian tour for a weekend, midweek or full week break, and caters for bookings from couples to large groups. Prices start from £385 per person for three nights with a full itinerary set out in a driving handbook and, of course, the fully

age of II weekends were for watching or competing in motor racing. Starting in junior mini-stock car racing, she competed for six years, up to her 17th birthday, and retired a champion with several trophies. During her teens she learnt to strip and rebuild the 1,275cc engine and weld the car's steel frame whenever repairs were needed. When she was 13, she recalls her father despairing of his daughter because he found her in the kitchen fixing her engine in the sink. At 16 she spent her savings on a Formula Ford lesson at Brands Hatch, which convinced her it should be her next move. And two years later she invested in a single-seat race car and competed in Formula Ford for two years, but, like most women, she found it tough and unfriendly:. "I was often knocked off the circuit by blokes who obviously felt I shouldn't be there."

So, aged 20, Kelly moved on to a friendlier - and infinitely more entertaining — form of racing, Legends. Powered by 1200cc motorbike engines and styled on Fifties American hot rods, this style of racing was more like the stock cars she was used to. She

Championship.
Then, earlier this year, Barry Lee the British Eurocar Champion, offered Kelly support in the new Pick-up Truck racing series. "It was just the recognition I needed," she says.

But the £20,000 pick-ups aren't cheap to run and, like every amateur driver, Kelly has hit financial problems. "I've spent every penny I have on racing and I've been unsuccessful in finding spon-sors." As the only girl in the series, she'd hoped to raise more interest.
"I'm doing well so far and if the car holds out I can gain several places. But if there's any damage or a tyre goes I'll have to give up because I'm broke." Kelly's first trip out in the pick-up was at Brands Hatch when she took eighth place out of 15 drivers. "It's a difficult race because the talent is spread out on the grid. The faster drivers often start off from the back."

The pick-up truck series is contested over 28 rounds at 14 race meetings, and the fifth race is this weekend at Brands Hatch. At each Eurocar race meeting the pick-ups have two races. The grid for race I is composed by lining up the drivers in the reverse order of points scored (highest scorers at the back). Race 2 is lined up the same way, with the drivers in the reverse finishing order of race 1. The result is a great

You just have to be very keen, because there isn't any prize money," adds Kelly. Instead, the winner gets an all-expenses paid trip to the 1998 Daytona 500 Nascar Race in America.

Nick and Stuart join the winners of the first two heats, Averil Compton and Gail Summers, to go through to the final at the Silverstone Driving Centre on July 4. The prize for the eventual winner is an expenses-paid trip to the Portuguese Grand Prix.
